I give and bequeath to The Century Association, of the City of New York, a New York corporation, the sum of $_____.

HISTORICAL

The CENTURY was founded, and its first Constitution adopted, January 13, 1847. One hundred gentlemen engaged or interested in Letters and the Fine Arts had been invited to join in forming the Association, of which number forty-two accepted the invitation and became Founders. Forty-six others joined during the year.

The name, suggested by the number originally invited to be members, was the proposal of Edgar S. Van Winkle.

On March 7, 1857, it was incorporated by an Act of the Legislature, which was amended March 29, 1883.

From the spring of 1847 to the spring of 1849 it occupied rooms at No. 495 Broadway.

From the spring of 1849 to the spring of 1850 it occupied rooms at No. 435 Broome Street.

From the spring of 1850 to May, 1852, it occupied rooms at No. 575 Broadway.

From May, 1852, to the spring of 1857, it occupied the house at No. 24 Clinton Place (now No. 46 East 8th Street).

From the spring of 1857 to January 5, 1891, it occupied the house at No. 109 (old No. 42) East Fifteenth Street.

On January 10, 1891 it removed to its present club-house, No. 7 West Forty-third Street.

Successive amendments to the Constitution fixed the limit of resident membership as follows: March 5, 1853, 200 members; March 7, 1857, 250; May 7, 1859, 350; February 1, 1862, 400; April 7, 1866, 500; February 6, 1875, 600; December 5, 1885, 700; May 3, 1890, 800; February 6, 1892, 1000. The limit of non-resident membership has been fixed as follows: February 6, 1892, 300; December 3, 1921, 400; January 14, 1928, 500; June 3, 1941, 600; March 1, 1945, 700.

On May 4, 1901, John Bigelow and Parke Godwin, only surviving members of The Column, a literary society founded in 1825, presented to The Century the privileges of fellow-membership with them. The silver memorial column bears a lamp which since 1858 had burned at every meeting of The Column and is now lighted at each gathering of The Century.

REPORT OF THE BOARD OF MANAGEMENT

THE Board of Management submits the following report for the year 1954:

FROM THE COMMITTEE ON ART

THE EXHIBITIONS of the year were as follows:

January 13-March 28: Sporting Art
March 31-May 30: "Life in New York City"
June 2-September 26: A selection of Portraits from the Permanent Collection of the National Academy of Design, Including Portraits of Many Centurions
October 6-October 31: Work by Amateur Artist Members
November 3-November 28: Work by Artist Members
December 1-January 9: Paintings by Louis Betts

For the work adjudged best in the Exhibition of Work by Amateur Artist Members, the Art Committee Medal was awarded to Richard A. Kimball for his water color painting, Islands. Honorable Mention was awarded to the following:

To Elihu Root, Jr., for his oil paintings, Vamp and Alice
To William Ernest Hocking, for his oil painting, The Musicians
To Whitney North Seymour, Jr., for his oil painting, Back Street, Angers, France

For the work adjudged best in the Autumn Exhibition of Work by Artist Members, the Art Committee Medal was awarded to Charles Hopkinson for his oil painting, Sketch

Portrait. Honorable Mention was awarded to the following:
To Xavier Gonzalez, for his oil painting, Cannabin
To William Franklin Draper, for his oil painting, Portrait of William H. Zinsser

The awards in the exhibitions of works by Centurions were made by majority vote of the Committee on Exhibitions. In addition to these formal awards, the Committee decided to try to ascertain the views of the members of the Club on the various works of art shown in these exhibitions. For that purpose a ballot box was installed in the Gallery so that members could express their preferences. The result of this experiment was that Vamp, by Elihu Root, Jr., in the Amateur Exhibition, and Portrait of Judge Medina, by John C. Johansen, in the Artist Members Exhibition, received the largest number of ballots.

During the year, the Club acquired the following works of art:
Bronze statuette, Balaam and His Ass, by John Angel, presented by Thomas Robins
Oil painting, Portrait of Daniel, by John C. Johansen, presented by the artist
Water color painting, Two Pigs, by Hobart Nichols, presented by the artist
Cire, General Lafayette, artist unknown, presented by Kendall Emerson

A silver cup was presented in memory of Leonard Bacon by a number of his friends.

Paintings from the Century's collection were loaned as follows:
To the American Academy of Arts and Letters for the exhibition, "The Great Decade in American Writing, with Paintings by Friends and Contemporaries of the Authors": Guerilla Warfare, by Albert Bierstadt; Coast Scene and The Falls and Bridge, by John F. Kensett; Portrait of Henry James, by John La Farge; The Summit of Monument Mountain, by Asher B. Durand

To the Suffolk Museum at Stony Brook, Long Island: The Power of Music, by William Sidney Mount

To the City Art Museum of St. Louis for the exhibition, "Westward the Way": Crossing the Ford, Platte River, Colorado, by Worthington Whittredge.

Gifford R. Beal, Chairman; Stephen C. Clark, Chairman of Committee on Exhibitions; Sidney Waugh, Chairman of House-Art Committee

FROM THE COMMITTEE ON LITERATURE

In the Century Yearbook for 1954, the Chairman of the Committee on Literature called attention respectfully to the fact that the Board of Management had accepted, on December 16, 1953, the offer of the firm of McKim, Mead and White to carry forward preliminary plans for adding a fifth story to the clubhouse. Since there seems to be no way, without more space, to prevent the reading interests of Centurions from being sacrificed to our need for eating space, the members of the present Committee watch hopefully for constructive action—upward!

Meanwhile, the treasures of the Association, in manuscripts and first editions, which have been locked away in safe obscurity, have been cleaned and refurbished under the supervision of Henry Clapp Smith, and we hope to display them in 1955.

During the year, 234 books were purchased, and 61 were presented to the library, making a total of 295 acquisitions for the year. On behalf of the Association, the Committee gratefully acknowledges gifts from the following members:

George W. Alger
Reginald Allen
Clarence L. Barnhart
John I. H. Baur

FROM THE MUSIC COMMITTEE

THE FIRST offering of the year by the Music Committee was a piano recital, on February 21, by Orazio Frugoni, the brilliant Italian virtuoso who has frequently appeared here and abroad with leading orchestras. Frugoni is also known to the musical world for his discovery of a hitherto unknown and unperformed Beethoven concerto which he introduced in New York in 1949. His program at the Century was as follows:

Toccata in D minor	Bach-Busoni
Aria	Pier Domenico Paradisi
Two Sonatas	D. Scarlatti
B Minor
A Major
Sonata op. 57, Appassionata	Beethoven
Allegro assai
Andante con moto
Allegro ma non troppo
Scherzo in B flat minor	Chopin
Two Etudes, Op. 10	Chopin
F Major
E Major
Berceuse op. 57	Chopin
Improvviso	Gaspare Scuderi
Castel Nuovo sul Carso	Gaspare Scuderi

On March 21 the Committee presented a program of Elizabethan music featuring Thomas Morley's Lessons for broken consort printed in 1599, and including settings of songs in Shakespeare's plays and also London Street Cries, all of which was of particular interest to literary as well as musical members of the Century and their guests. The music for the broken consort of six instruments was assembled at the Music Division of the New York Public Library from contemporary manuscripts and scattered part books of the time after years of search for missing parts, the trail leading from Cambridge, England, to San Marino, California, and involving the cooperation of the Huntington, Folger, and British Museums, Cambridge University, and the Bodleian and Christ Church Libraries. Sydney Beck, Music Editor of the Library, is responsible for the actual reconstruction of the score.

For the performance at the Century, authentic seventeenth-century instruments were used, i.e., treble viol, bass viol, virginals, lute, recorder, cittern, and pandora, some of them on loan from museums such as the Metropolitan Museum of Art, Yale University, Cooper Union, and from the private collections of William F. Koch, Roger Dakin, Harold Newman, Howe Peterson, and Charles W. Hughes. The artists performing on this occasion were:

Helen Boatwright	Soprano
Charlene Peterson	Soprano
William Hess	Tenor
Blanche Winogron	Virginals
Howard Boatwright	Treble Viol
Sydney Beck	Bass Viol
Joseph Iadone	Lute
David Cook	Cittern
James Barney	Pandora

Illuminating commentary on the pieces and instruments was made by Carleton Sprague Smith who, in resourceful manner, substituted for the indisposed player of the recorder. Most of the numbers were first performances since Elizabethan days.

Philip James, Chairman

FROM THE HOUSE COMMITTEE

EVERY YEAR there are necessary improvements, some of which are reasonably obvious because of their effect on the appearance of our premises and others which are likely to escape notice even though no less important to our general well-being.

In the second category may be mentioned the following items. A new service sink has been installed in the bar. It is an elaborate creation of gleaming metal with modern conveniences which should help promote the rapid flow of beverages to their destinations. The floors of the Gallery and all the rooms of the second floor have been scraped and refinished. Bassett Jones has produced changes in the lighting on the second floor to give better illumination both for those who read and for the pictures on the walls.

There are a number of more obvious matters. The view into our handsome Library has been improved by removing the catalogue cabinet and other obstructions so as not to block the vista through the columns. Several sofas have been renovated or replaced in the interest of both comfort and appearance. The Medal Room has received new furniture and finish and has become a pleasant and useful space. The fireplace in the West Room has been given a facing of Red Levanto marble to bring it into harmony with those in the East Room. The handsome bust of Elihu Root by James Earle Fraser has been installed on a pedestal on the stair landing above the second floor, and it and the bust of Washington in the second-floor hall have been effectively lighted.

Perhaps the most conspicuous improvement is the redecoration of the central hall on the second floor. Lawrence Grant White directed the work and selected a lighter scheme in two subtle tones of gray with terra cotta in the niches behind the statues. The statues themselves were treated so as to look more like stone than plaster. The result has been to make our hall brighter and more interesting by making articulate its noble architecture.

Francis Roudebush designed and had executed a handsome mahogany table lectern for use at our meetings, when such a lectern is appropriate.

Gifts to the Century during the year, which the House Committee on behalf of the Association acknowledges with gratitude, include:

An historic antique desk and mirror from Elihu Church
Tennessee ham from Gilmore D. Clarke
Brook Trout from Edward R. Finch
Salmon from Allen Evarts Foster
Maine Lobster from Roscoe H. Hupper
Lighting Reflectors from Stanley W. McCandless
Spring flowers from Virginia from Stuart W. Jackson
Bay Scallops from Bassett Jones
Maple Syrup from Walter H. Kilham, Jr.
Sweet Corn from Frank C. Nicodemus, Jr.

On January 14 the Annual Meeting was held, with the traditional ceremony in memory of our fellow-members who had died during the year. Subsequent meetings, with the speakers and their topics, were as follows:

February 4—Alfred F. Loomis, "Rolling up to Rio," an illustrated talk on a 1,200-mile ocean race from Buenos Aires to Rio de Janeiro.

March 4—Harold R. Medina, "Lightly but not too lightly, seriously but not too seriously" on the trial of the Communists.

April 1—A Mock Convocation, "The Only Authentic Celebration of Columbia University's Two Hundred Years of Exploitation of the City of New York."

May 6—Robert Cushman Murphy, "On the Payroll of the Birds." An illustrated talk.

November 4—John Angel, An illustrated talk on "The Making of Cathedral Sculpture."

December 2—Dr. E. N. van Kleffens, an informal talk on the United Nations.

A notable event was the Dinner of Welcome to New Members on October 21. Under the guiding genius of Franklin B. Kirkbride, a ceremony worthy of the occasion was developed. It included the lighting of the Century Lamp and recital of the Century Pledge by Walter Hampden; the carrying in of the Manship Bowl and singing by members of our staff; the Address of Welcome by Franklin Kirkbride, read in his enforced absence by Paul A. Wolfe; Erdman Harris at the Piano; and a greeting by President Kieffer. Alfred de Liagre, Jr., ably stage-managed the affair, and Walker Cain embellished the printed program with entertaining illustrations of the House Rules. The evening, which was unusually well attended, ended with refreshments "on the house" and singing led by Howard Craig, Chandler Foot, and Erdman Harris.

MEMBERSHIP

During the year, the membership increased from 1674 to 1676, as follows:

RESIDENT MEMBERS:
January 1, 1954	970
Elected and qualified during the year	43
Reinstated	1
Transferred to Resident class	13
		1027
LESS:
Deaths reported during the year	26
Resigned	8
Transferred from Resident class	30
		64
Resident members, December 31, 1954			963

NON-RESIDENT MEMBERS:
January 1, 1954		704
Elected during the year	33
Failed to qualify	1
		32
Reinstated		3
Transferred to Non-Resident class		26
			765
LESS:
Deaths reported during the year		33
Resigned		10
Transferred from Non-Resident class		9
			52
Non-Resident members, December 31, 1954				713
TOTAL MEMBERSHIP, DECEMBER 31, 1954				1676

Of the 1676 members, two were Honorary Members, and fifty-nine were in the Absent and Exempt Classes, leaving 1615 dues-paying members.

At the end of the year, there were 66 vacancies in the Resident class and 19 vacancies in the Non-Resident class, with 77 candidates in the former and 59 candidates in the latter.

As a matter of record, it should be stated that the 1954 Year-Book incorrectly reported the division of the Association's membership as between Resident and Non-Resident, listing the former at 33 members less than on the official rolls and the latter at 33 more. The error has been corrected in the foregoing summary.

OTHER MATTERS

The Century Medal. At its October Meeting, the Board of Management established The Century Medal as an award to be made by the Board from time to time "for distinguished service to the Association." Paul Manhip has agreed to design it. The first award was made to Franklin B. Kirkbride.

Honorary Member. On recommendation of the Board of Management, the Association, at the Annual Meeting on January 13, 1955, elected Charles C. Burlingham the twentieth Honorary Member of the Century.

Gari Melchers Gold Medal. In December, the Artists' Fellowship awarded to the Association in memory of Gari Melchers, President of the Century from 1931 to 1933, the Gari Melchers Gold Medal of the Fellowship.

Committee on Admissions. At the request of the Committee, the Board of Management authorized that the Year-Book include the statement of "Requirements of the Committee on Admissions" and the extract from the minutes of the Committee's meeting on January 23, 1923, interpreting the word "amateur" as used in Article I of the Constitution.

Archivist. To continue Rodman Gilder's work on the Archives of the Association, the Board of Management re-created the office of Archivist and appointed Adriaan J. Barnouw to fill it.

REQUIREMENTS OF
COMMITTEE ON ADMISSIONS

AN ACT TO INCORPORATE THE CENTURY ASSOCIATION

PASSED MARCH 7, 1857

The People of the State of New York, represented in Senate and Assembly, do enact as follows:

Section 1. Gulian C. Verplanck, William C. Bryant, Charles M. Leupp, Asher B. Durand, John F. Kensett, William Kemble and William H. Appleton, and such other persons as are now associated as "The Century," or may hereafter become associated with them, are hereby constituted a body corporate by the name of "The Century Association," to be located in the city of New-York, for the purpose of promoting the advancement of art and literature by establishing and maintaining a library, reading room and gallery of art, and by such other means as shall be expedient and proper for that purpose.

§ 2. The said corporation shall have the power to make and adopt a constitution and by-laws, rules and regulations, for the admission, suspension and expulsion of its members, and their government, the election of its officers and to define their duties, and for the safe keeping and protection of its property and funds, and from time to time to alter or repeal such constitution, by-laws, rules and regulations. The seven persons named in the first section of this act shall constitute the trustees and managers until others are elected in their places.

§ 3. The said corporation may purchase and hold or lease any real and personal estate; provided that they shall not hold any real estate the value of which shall exceed the sum of fifty thousand dollars.

§ 4. The said corporation shall possess the general powers, and be subject to the general restrictions and liabilities prescribed in the third title of the eighteenth chapter of the first part of the Revised Statutes.

§ 5. The Legislature may at any time alter or repeal this act.

§ 6. This act shall take effect immediately.

By a special Act of the Legislature, passed March 29th, 1883, the Association was authorized to hold real estate to the value of three hundred thousand dollars. This was superseded by the general Corporation Law, under which the Association is entitled to hold real estate to the value of three million dollars.

ARTICLE I

THIS Association shall be composed of authors, artists, and amateurs of letters and the fine arts.

ARTICLE II

§ 1. The officers shall be a President, two Vice-Presidents, a Secretary, and a Treasurer; and there shall also be sixteen Trustees. Such officers, together with the Trustees, shall be a Board of Management. Of the Trustees not less than three shall be authors, not less than three artists, and not more than eight amateurs. No person shall be eligible as a trustee for more than three years in succession.

The officers and trustees shall be chosen at each annual meeting by ballot, and shall continue in office until the next annual meeting, or until their successors are elected.

§ 2. The President shall preside at the meetings of the Association; he shall also be Chairman of the Board of Management; he shall, with the Secretary, sign all written contracts and obligations of the Association, and he shall perform such other duties as the Board of Management of the Association may assign him.

The First Vice-President, or in his absence the Second Vice-President, shall discharge the duties of the President in case of his absence or during a vacancy in his office.

§ 3. The Secretary shall keep minutes of all meetings of the Association and of the Board of Management; shall notify members of their election, issue notices for all meetings of the Association, and conduct the correspondence and keep the records; which records and correspondence shall be open to the inspection of members at all reasonable times.

§ 4. The Treasurer shall collect and, under the direction of the Board of Management, disburse the funds. He shall report at the monthly meeting in February and oftener if required, on the state of the funds. His accounts shall be audited by a select committee of three, appointed or elected at the monthly meeting next previous to the annual meeting.

In case of the absence, disability, or death of the Treasurer, the President or the Board of Management shall have power to appoint a Treasurer pro tem, to serve during such absence or disability, or, in case of the death of the Treasurer, until the vacancy shall have been filled.

§ 5. Any officer or trustee may be removed, for cause, at any meeting of the Association, upon due notice, and any vacancy in an office shall be filled for the residue of the term by the Board of Management.

ARTICLE III

Of the Powers of the Association at its General Meetings

§ 1. All the corporate powers remain vested in the Association, and they may be exercised at any regular meeting, subject to the restrictions herein contained.

§ 2. No resolution making any disposition by way of sale, lease, or mortgage, of any of the property of the Association, or whereby an expenditure of more than two hundred and fifty dollars is or may be incurred, shall be passed except at a meeting at which sixty members shall be present, and two-thirds of those present shall vote in favor thereof, nor until the resolution shall have been referred to and considered by the Board of Management and they shall have reported their opinion thereon, which report shall be made at the monthly meeting next after the reference.

ARTICLE IV

Of the Board of Management

§ 1. The Board of Management shall have general charge of the affairs, funds, and property of the Association. It shall be their duty to carry out the objects and purposes thereof; and to this end they may exercise all the powers of the Association, subject to the Constitution and By-Laws, and to such action as the Association may take at its monthly or annual meetings.

§ 2. The Board of Management shall have regular meetings as often as once in each month from November to June inclusive, and they shall submit a report of the affairs of the Association at each annual meeting, and shall report at other times if required. Seven members shall constitute a quorum.

§ 3. The Board of Management may invite distinguished strangers visiting the City to partake of the privileges of the Association during their stay. [Amended December 3, 1921.]

§ 4. The Board of Management shall have the power to remit the dues of any member, for such cause and for such period as in their judgment may be advisable and proper. During that period such member shall not be counted in the limitation of members. [Amended December 3, 1921.]

ARTICLE V

Of Committees and their Duties

§ 1. Committee on Admissions. The Committee on Admissions shall consist of twenty-one members, who shall be chosen by ballot at the annual meeting, and shall hold office until their successors shall be elected. At the annual meeting in January, 1889, seven members of the Committee shall be elected to serve three years, seven two years, and seven one year. At each subsequent annual meeting seven members shall be chosen to serve three years. No member of the Committee shall be eligible for re-election within one year of the expiration of three years' service on said Committee. Vacancies by death, or otherwise, may be filled by the Committee until the next annual meeting. They shall fix their own time and place of meeting. Eleven members shall constitute a quorum.

§ 2. Other Committees. There shall be a House Committee and a Committee on Literature, each composed of three members of the Board of Management. There shall be an Art Committee composed of at least seven members, of whom at least three shall be members of the Board of Management. These Committees shall be appointed by the Board of Management within two weeks after each annual meeting. The Board may provide for the appointment of additional members of any of said Committees from time to time; such additional members need not be members of the Board. The particular duties of each of said Committees shall be defined by the By-Laws. [Amended March 3, 1934.]

ARTICLE VI

Of the Members

§ 1. The number of resident members is limited to one thousand. [Amended February 6, 1892.]

§ 2. Any member who, having paid the entrance fee and the dues for one year, is absent from the United States for a continuous period of not less than twelve months shall, during his absence, be exempt from the payment of dues, provided that he shall have given to the Treasurer previous notice in writing of his intention to be absent. Absentees shall not be counted in the limitation of the number of resident members. In case the return of absentees shall increase the number above the limit prescribed, no new resident members shall be chosen until the number shall be reduced by resignation or otherwise below such limit.

§ 3. There shall also be a class of non-resident members, not exceeding seven hundred in number, to consist of persons residing permanently more than fifty miles from New York City Hall, and having no office or place of business in New York. [Amended March 1, 1945.]

All members of the Armed Forces of the United States, who are now members or who may be elected to membership, may at their option be held to be non-resident members during their active service. [Amended March 1, 1945.]

An artist member who has paid an entrance fee as a resident member may at his option elect to be classified as a non-resident member and be liable for annual dues as such but shall remain entitled to all the privileges of the Association, including the right of voting and of holding office. [Amended April 3, 1947.]

§ 4. No person shall be admitted as a member of the Association unless he shall have been recommended by the Committee on Admissions, on the proposal of two members not belonging to that Committee.

The name of every person proposed for admission, whether as a resident or a non-resident member, with his residence and the names of the members proposing him, shall be posted in the rooms at least fifteen days before being acted upon by the Committee. The Committee shall receive and consider all communications in reference to the persons proposed, and make careful examination as to their qualifications; it shall pass upon each name separately, and two negative votes shall be a rejection of the candidate. The proceedings of the Committee shall be secret and confidential.

At every monthly meeting of the Association the Committee shall furnish printed lists, properly classified, of the names of the persons recommended for admission, not exceeding twenty in number, and the Association shall then proceed to vote by depositing the lists with tellers appointed by the Chairman. The erasure from the list of any name shall be considered a vote in the negative. If negative votes be cast against any candidate to the number of one-fifth of the votes cast, his candidacy shall be referred back to the Committee on Admissions for further consideration. If the candidacy of such person again comes before the Association, negative votes cast against such person to the number of one-fifth of the votes cast shall exclude him from membership. [Amended January 8, 1953.]

No person so excluded shall be eligible for election within twelve months thereafter.

§ 5. Non-resident members may at any time, on and after the 30th April, 1896, be transferred from the list of resident members upon application in writing to the Treasurer. The members so transferred shall not be entitled to reimbursement of any part of the entrance fee. [Amended February 1896.]

Non-resident members shall be entitled to all the privileges of the Association, except the right of voting and of holding office. They shall be subject to the Constitution and By-Laws and to all the regulations of the Association.

§ 6. The Secretary and Treasurer, two weeks previous to each monthly meeting, shall determine the number of vacancies in each class of members and certify the same to the Committee on Admissions.

§ 7. An entrance fee of one hundred and fifty dollars shall be paid by each resident member, and of one hundred dollars by each non-resident member.

Such payment shall be made within thirty days after notice in writing of his election; or if within thirty days after such notice the member gives written notice to the Treasurer of his desire to do so, such payment may be made in four instalments, each of one quarter of the amount of the entrance fee; the first instalment shall be payable within thirty days after notice of his election, the second instalment within six months after such notice, the third instalment within twelve months after such notice, and the fourth instalment within eighteen months after such notice.

In default of such payment of the entrance fee, or the first instalment thereof, within thirty days after such notice, the member shall be deemed to have declined his election unless the Board of Management determines otherwise.

If any member fails to pay a subsequent instalment of his entrance fee when due, he shall be notified thereof in writing, and unless such instalment shall be paid within one month after such notice he shall thereupon cease to be a member unless the Board of Management determines otherwise. [Amended January 14, 1939.]

§ 8. The annual dues of resident members shall be one hundred twenty-five dollars, payable semi-annually in advance on the first days of May and November; and the annual dues of non-resident members shall be sixty-two and one-half dollars, payable on admission, and on each first day of May thereafter. [Amended March 6, 1947.]

The dues of all newly-elected members shall be computed proportionally from the first day of the month succeeding their election.

When the dues of any member shall remain unpaid for the space of three months, the Treasurer shall cause him to be notified that, unless the same be paid within one month thereafter, his membership will cease; and in case such dues shall not be paid pursuant to such notice, or such default be accounted for to the Board of Management, he shall thereupon cease to be a member.

In case any member of the non-resident class other than an artist member shall come to reside within the radius above named, or shall establish an office or place of business in the City of New York, it shall be his duty forthwith to notify the Treasurer of the Association in writing of such change, and he shall then be deemed a resident member with annual dues accordingly, and unless he has already paid the entrance fee of a resident member, he shall also pay to the Treasurer within thirty days the additional amount of entrance fees necessary to constitute him a resident member; in default of such payment he shall cease to be a member. [Amended March 6, 1947.]

It shall be the duty of each member to keep the Treasurer informed of his address.

§ 9. Honorary members may be elected from the membership of the Association on the recommendation of the Board of Management, at a regular monthly meeting, by unanimous vote by ballot. No more than one honorary member shall be chosen in any one year. Honorary members shall be exempt from the payment of annual dues and shall be entitled to all the privileges of the Association except that of holding office.

§ 10. Any member may be suspended or expelled for violation of the Constitution or By-Laws, or for any offence or misconduct which may be deemed sufficient to warrant such suspension or expulsion, by a vote, at a monthly meeting, of three-fourths of the members present, one month's previous notice having been given to the member charged. It shall be the duty of the Board of Management to report any member for action under this rule.

The Board of Management shall also have the power for a like cause, by the affirmative vote of eleven (11) of its members, after a hearing has been granted on one month's previous notice, to suspend any member from all privileges as such member indefinitely, pending further action; but any member affected thereby may require the resolution of suspension to be reported to the Association.

Membership may also be forfeited by failure to pay any indebtedness to the Association, in such manner as may be prescribed by the By-Laws.

§ 11. In the rooms of the Association, betting of any kind is strictly prohibited. [Amended November 5, 1927.]

ARTICLE VII

Of Meetings

§ 1. There shall be an annual meeting of the Association for the election of officers and members and other business. It shall be held on the second Thursday of January of each year, at 9 o'clock P.M.

§ 2. There shall be monthly meetings of the Association for the election of members and other business. They shall be held on the first Thursday of November, December, February, March, April, May and June at 9 o'clock P.M. [Amended June 3, 1941.]

§ 3. Special meetings may be called by the Board of Management; and they shall call a meeting at any time on the written request of ten members, which request shall specify the object of the meeting.

§ 4. The number of members necessary to constitute a quorum at an annual meeting shall be fifty, and at a monthly or special meeting shall be thirty.

ARTICLE VIII

Of Amendments

§ 1. This Constitution shall commence and take effect on the second Saturday of January, 1870, and the previous Constitution thereupon shall cease.

§ 2. No alteration or amendment of this Constitution shall be made unless the same be proposed at a previous regular meeting, and then posted in a conspicuous place in the rooms of the Association and the text of the same sent to each voting member with the notice of the meeting at which it may be considered, and be finally adopted at a subsequent meeting by the votes of two-thirds of the members present at the passage thereof.

§ 3. By-Laws, Rules, and Regulations, not inconsistent with the Charter or this Constitution, may be made, adopted, altered, or repealed at any monthly or annual meeting; provided, the proposed by-law, rule, regulation, alteration, or repeal shall have been proposed at a previous monthly meeting, and then posted in a conspicuous place in the rooms of the Association and the text of the same sent to each voting member with the notice of the meeting at which it may be considered, and shall be adopted by the votes of two-thirds of the members present at the passage thereof.

BY-LAWS

§ 1. No book, journal, paper, picture, statue, or other work of art, the property of the Association, shall be taken from the rooms, under any pretext whatever, except by authority of the Board of Management.

§ 2. On the first day of each month or as soon thereafter as may be practicable, there shall be sent to each member notice of his indebtedness to the Association on the last day of the preceding month, and if the same is not paid on or before the fifteenth day of the month the names of the members so in default, together with the amounts due, shall be posted on a separate sheet in the hall.

In case any such indebtedness shall not be discharged at the expiration of a month from the date of such first notice, a second notice shall be mailed to the member in default, notifying him that further credit will not be extended to him until his indebtedness is discharged, and that in case he continues in such default for ten days thereafter, he will be excluded from all privileges of the Association until such indebtedness is paid, and such member shall thereupon, upon the expiration of such ten days, be so excluded, and notice to that effect shall thereupon be posted on a separate sheet in the hall.

At any time during such exclusion the Board of Management may declare the membership of such delinquent to be forfeited, and his name shall thereupon be dropped from the roll of members.

But before such action shall be taken by the Board of Management, it shall cause a copy of this By-Law to be mailed to the delinquent member.

A copy of this By-Law shall be sent with such second notice.

§ 3. A suggestion book shall be kept at the rooms in which every member is authorized to enter, under his signature, any complaint as to the management of the Association, and any suggestions he may desire to make.

§ 4. Visitors:

(a) A member may introduce a guest to the rooms of the Association for one day by entering the name and address of such guest and the date in the book to be kept for that purpose. This privilege may be suspended for any particular day by the House Committee. A member may not introduce the same person as a daily guest more than twice in the calendar year, and may not introduce more than one daily guest on the same day.

(b) A member may invite visitors to the Art Gallery during any Art Exhibition of the Association through signing cards of invitation printed for that purpose, but such cards of invitation shall not entitle visitors to pass to other parts of the house.

(c) A member may introduce guests to the private dining room when he has reserved that room for an entertainment.

(d) The House Committee, at the request in writing of a member, may extend the privileges of the Association for a total period of one month in any twelve months to a guest whose residence is more than fifty miles from the City Hall. Extension of this time may, on the recommendation of the House Committee, be granted by the Board of Management.

A member may not obtain from the House Committee such privileges for more than one guest at a time, nor for the same guest more than once in a period of twelve months. Guest privileges extended by the House Committee or on its recommendation may be terminated at the discretion of the Committee at any time. [Amended May 6, 1954.]

(e) Guests while enjoying the privileges of the Association as provided in paragraphs (a) and (d) are on the same footing as non-resident members, except that they may not introduce visitors and may not be present at any business meeting of the Association. Nor shall the House Committee grant the same privileges to the same guest more than once in a period of twelve months.

(f) A member who obtains admission to the club-house for a guest becomes responsible for the conduct of such guest and for any indebtedness of such guest to the Association.

(g) The Board of Management may modify these rules to meet special cases.

(h) It is the duty of the House Committee to enforce the provisions of this section and promptly to report to the Board of Management all cases of persistent violation thereof.

(i) In case of violation of any of the provisions of this section, the House Committee may summarily suspend the privileges accorded therein with regard to any member or visitor for a period not exceeding ten days, and in all cases of violation the Board of Management may suspend such privileges for such period as in their discretion the interest of the Association may require.

(j) In addition to the powers herein above granted, the Board of Management may provide for the invitation of authors, artists, and composers of music to be guests of the Association.

Such invitations shall be for the term of one year but shall be renewable; and the total number so invited shall not exceed fifty at any one time. [Amended November 5, 1942.]

§ 5. The House Committee shall have the charge of furnishing supplies, employing stewards and servants, keeping the rooms and premises of the Association in order for use, regulating the place, character and the extent of recreation and amusements in the club-house, and enforcing the rule as to admission of visitors. [Amended November 5, 1927.]

The care of newspapers and current periodicals is entrusted to the House Committee.

§ 6. The Committee on Literature shall have charge of the Library, and of the supply of books, and shall subscribe for periodicals and newspapers. Loud or continuous conversation shall not be carried on in the Library, nor, except on Thursday nights, shall refreshments be served therein.

§ 7. The Committee on Art shall have charge of all works of art owned or possessed by the Association; and it shall be their duty to make arrangements for exhibition, at monthly and annual meetings, of the works of artists of the Association, and other works of art, at their discretion. They shall keep a catalogue of the works of art owned or possessed by the Association, or exhibited in its rooms, and shall record therein every such work, with the name of the author, the title of the work, and the time of exhibition. The Committee on Art shall have charge of all decorations of the rooms. No work of art shall be accepted as a gift, or purchased by the Association, until the Committee on Art has made a report thereon to the Board of Management.

§ 8. The expenditures of the House Committee, and the Committees on Literature and Art, shall be limited to such sums as the Board of Management shall prescribe.

§ 9. A perfect list of members, officers, and committees shall be kept posted up in the rooms of the Association; and such list shall be corrected under the direction of the Treasurer and Secretary, from time to time, as changes occur.

§ 10. The above By-Laws shall go into effect on the second Saturday of January, 1870.

§ 11. A Nominating Committee shall annually be constituted as follows. The Board of Management shall at its last spring meeting propose as candidates for such committee the names of seven members of the Club, of whom two shall be members of the Board of Management, not eligible for re-election, and two shall be members of the Committee on Admissions. The names shall be posted in the club-house at least twenty days before the November monthly meeting of the Club. At any time not later than ten days before the November monthly meeting, additional candidates may be proposed for the Committee, provided that in each case the proposal, indorsed by twenty-five resident members, be presented in writing to the Secretary of the Club. [Amended May 1, 1952.]

All the names proposed by either of the above methods shall be printed in a single list, the names proposed by the Board of Management being designated by an asterisk. From this list, which shall be distributed at the monthly meeting in November, the Club shall elect by ballot the Nominating Committee. Each member may vote for not more than seven names on the list, and the seven candidates receiving the highest number of votes shall be declared elected. [Amended May 1, 1952.]

The Nominating Committee shall at the earliest practicable moment post in the club-house the names of candidates for all the positions to be filled. Additional candidates for such positions or any of them, may be nominated, and shall be posted, provided that in each case the nomination, indorsed by fifty resident members, be presented in writing to the Secretary of the Club not later than one week before the Annual Meeting.

The Secretary of the Club shall prepare printed lists of all candidates named by either of the aforesaid methods, the names to be grouped under the titles of the positions to be filled; the candidates for Trustees to be arranged in three groups, designated respectively as Authors, Artists, and Amateurs, and all names proposed by the Nominating Committee to be designated by an asterisk. These lists shall be distributed to members at the Annual Meeting, and shall serve as ballots in the election, provided that nothing herein be construed to restrict the right of any member to vote by means of written names for persons whose names do not appear in print.

§ 12. An Investment Committee consisting of four members and the Treasurer shall be appointed by the Board of Management annually. It shall be the duty of this committee to supervise the investments of the Club and to advise the Treasurer with respect to the purchase and sale of its investments.

REQUIREMENTS OF THE COMMITTEE ON ADMISSIONS

FOR the guidance of members of the Association, the Year-Book contains the Requirements of the Committee on Admissions and the extract from the Committee's minutes concerning the interpretation of "amateurs of letters and the fine arts."

With respect to letters concerning candidates, the members of the Association are requested to send to the Committee such information, whether favorable or unfavorable, as they feel will assist in the consideration of a candidate. Article I of the Constitution declares: "This Association shall be composed of authors, artists, and amateurs of letters and the fine arts." The mere endorsement of a name is of little help to the Committee in determining whether a candidate, whatever his vocation, has such breadth of interest and qualities of mind as would make him a sympathetic, stimulating, and congenial companion in such a society.

Members are requested not to propose, second, or endorse more than one candidate in any one letter.

All communications are confidential. After final action has been taken on a candidate, letters unfavorable to him are returned to their writers by registered mail, and all other letters are destroyed. "The proceedings of the Committee shall be secret and confidential." (Constitution, Article VI)

REQUIREMENTS OF THE COMMITTEE

1. The proposer must write to the Committee, stating the name, address, and qualifications of the candidate. The letter should convey definite information as to the candidate's background, vocation, attainments, character, and personality. If he is not an artist or an author, it should also give evidence as to those interests and tastes outside of his vocation which would make him a sympathetic, stimulating, and congenial companion in a society of artists and authors.

2. The seconder must also write to the Committee in regard to the candidate. The letter should contain information of a character similar to that outlined for the proposer's letter.

3. The name, address, and vocation * of the candidate shall be entered in the Candidates' Book, preferably by the proposer and seconder, with their signatures. The Secretary of the Committee may make such entry when the letters of recommendation have been received from both proposer and seconder. A candidacy is not completed until these letters have been received and the entry has been made.

4. The candidate must be known to at least two members of the Committee if he is a candidate for resident membership or to at least one member if he is a candidate for non-resident membership. To facilitate the introduction of candidates to members of the Committee, proposers and seconders are asked to get in touch with the Chairman of the Sub-Committee to which the candidate has been assigned.

5. The Committee must receive, in addition to the letters of the proposer and seconder, at least ten letters from other members of the Association concerning a candidate for resident membership or at least six letters concerning a candidate

* The Committee on Admissions has long interpreted the term "amateur" as relating to "breadth of interest and qualities of mind and imagination" rather than to "occupation." It therefore suggests to proposers that in filling the space (in the Candidates' Book) designated "occupation," they use some term other than "amateur" to describe the candidate's "profession or occupation," in compliance with Rule I of the Committee, as adopted by the Association.

for non-resident membership. These letters should do more than merely endorse a candidate; they should contain information which will be a source of enlightenment to the Committee as to the candidate's qualifications.

"AMATEURS OF LETTERS AND THE FINE ARTS"

[From the Minutes of the Committee on Admissions, January 23, 1923]

Your special Committee appointed to consider the difficulties that have lately developed within the Admissions Committee over the interpretation of the word "amateur" in Article I of the Constitution, and to report on a suggestion that Article I should be amended, has made inquiries, has considered, and now reports.

We find that for more than sixty years the Committee on Admissions has been guided in passing upon qualifications of candidates not by such a narrow interpretation of the words "amateurs of letters and the fine arts" as would have required candidates to be experts or connoisseurs, but rather by the view that those words as used in the Constitution were intended to admit gentlemen of any occupation provided their breadth of interest and qualities of mind and imagination made them sympathetic, stimulating, and congenial companion in a society of authors and artists. We believe that this construction has long been clearly expressed through the Century's membership, and that the Admissions Committee may now regard it as being sanctioned and established by long usage and tradition. Consequently, we also think that the Admissions Committee need not hesitate to govern itself accordingly, and need not call upon the Club to undertake the difficult task of formulating a precise definition of the word "amateur."

On the other hand, we see no reason why it should not be admitted here that the Admissions Committee has erred in particular cases. It seems better to recognize this than to let anyone suppose that mistakes are to be accepted as precedents for a lax standard. This is stated because confusion has lately resulted from just that supposition.

The Admissions Committee should make it clear to all its members that it intends to interpret "amateur" very broadly, but never to interpret it so loosely as to cover candidates who do not clearly possess what may be called a responsible sympathy with letters and the fine arts, no matter how eminent or successful they may be, no matter how respectable socially, or how deserving of recognition on special grounds. It is understood that the writer of a technical treatise is not such an "author" as the Constitution intends; similarly, a mere collector, no matter how untiring, might well stand outside our broadest interpretations of "amateur." We do not want spiritual mediocrity. Our standard is obviously hard to define. But if the word "culture" did not sound priggish to some ears, it would perhaps suggest most briefly what the Century requires of a candidate quite apart from any special kind of ability or success.

THE CENTURY MEMORIALS

BY THE HISTORIAN

Frederick Lewis Allen

Frederick L. Allen was born in Boston, the son of a clergyman. He prepared at Groton and graduated from Harvard in 1912. In 1913 he took the A.M. degree there.

From the first he was interested in English composition. He taught freshman English and comparative literature two years at Harvard ("caddying for Bliss Perry," as he remarked) and then joined the editorial staff of the Atlantic Monthly under Ellery Sedgwick. After the war, he was Secretary of the Harvard Corporation for some years; but, divining that this was more satisfying at thirty than it would be at fifty, he came to New York, and became Assistant Editor, then Associate Editor, and finally Editor-in-Chief of Harper's Magazine.

Like many practitioners in the professions and arts, he found he could do better if he were interrupted. He wanted to write, and he was very good at it, but he could not do it all day every day. He arranged to work for Harper's four days a week, and the rest of the time he worked for himself, mostly writing magazine articles. In 1931 he published his first book, Only Yesterday, a review of the 1920's, and to his great surprise it became a best-seller and eventually sold over half a million copies. This equipped Fred with money and fame. He was elected an Overseer of Harvard, a Trustee of Bennington, and to various other placements that were amusing and important. After a while he wrote some more books, contemporary history for the most part, and they went well, too.

Fred took all this quite casually. He enjoyed his work for its own sake, and he was glad to be able to make a living out of it. But, in very fact, his books were entirely out of the ordinary, and it was no accident that people bought them and read them. He had a historical detachment in telling about the astonishing performances of the big shots, and he related their idiocies without cant or bitterness as though he were describing fireworks. In his last book, The Big Change, it is perfectly evident that he entirely understood the motives and ambitions of the self-appointed moulders of our destinies and regarded them with a tolerance and humor that should reassure the rest of us.

In the Century, Fred served at various times on the Board of Managers, the Admissions Committee, and the Committee on Literature. He was in the Club a great deal, and could be found playing pool almost any weekday in the late afternoon. He was a first-class cowboy player and marvellously pleasant to play with. He talked just the way he wrote (unlike Goldsmith); and the stimulation and humor of his conversation, and the total absence of humbug or pedantry were outward signs of a kind and cultivated gentleman.

Reese Denny Alsop

Reese D. Alsop prepared at Groton and graduated from Yale in 1906 and from the Columbia Law School in 1910. He was admitted to the New York Bar in the latter year, and began to practice with Hunt, Hill and Betts. In 1920 he became a partner.

The firm was one of the leading admiralty firms of the City, and Reese took to this field with conspicuous success. Later he became involved in railroad reorganization work and the endless problems of common carriers. He was a wise and competent lawyer, very much aware that a proposition or an argument must be workable as well as right.

He was a gentle person, eager, responsive, and pleasant to associate with. He kept a sailboat at Port Jefferson, and used to cruise around the Elizabeth Islands and Buzzards Bay and up and down the Sound. He generally lunched at the Down Town Club and was a familiar figure there where he had friends who were fond of him and who will miss him very much.

John Worthington Ames

John W. Ames graduated from Harvard in 1892 and then studied at l'École des Beaux-Arts. He practiced architecture in Boston. He was for so short a time a member of the Century and came to the clubhouse so seldom that it is not likely that many members knew him. He was an enthusiastic chess player, and perhaps it was the hope that he might find chess companions that was a chief inducement to his joining, though he was too reserved—one could not say too shy—to exploit the possibilities that may have existed. From the outside his life appeared uneventful, although he has left behind him an impressive number of buildings, chiefly collegiate, that proved his taste and skill as an architect and gave him a place of distinction in his profession.

It is the man, however, and not his works, that is important here, and it is a misfortune that one cannot hope to carry over to those who were not acquainted with him the qualities that made him the symbol of whatever was delightful in a companion and precious as a friend. Throughout the main part of his life Ames did not have the background of a financial security that is usually a condition for that combination of ease, spontaneity, sensitivity, and responsiveness that we call charm; but he had it all, and more. Ordinarily he was gay, witty, and provocative; but close beneath what might mistakenly have appeared to be a somewhat shiny finish, there were a ready receptiveness and an understanding of the embarrassments and problems of those who chose to confide in him, a warm sympathy, and much helpful counsel.

He had informed and definite opinions on the plastic arts, and was himself a painter not devoid of merit. He also had an altogether reliable judgment in the field of letters, and an amazing familiarity with Shakespeare: so much, indeed, that it became a game to see whether he could spot a little known passage taken from a play at random. He was likely to do so. He was an enthusiastic admirer of Scott, and would brook no qualification of the skill of the author or the continued interest of the tales—an unexpected addiction in one so far from naive and usually so exacting. To those who had his friendship, he was always a dependable source of refreshment, solace, and restoration. In their lives he will never be replaced; nor will the loss of his companionship ever cease to be felt.

In a world so baffled, so tragic, and so portentous as ours it is easy to mistake the importance of those who leave little conspicuous impression upon outward events. This is a very great blunder. Whatever may be the final list of those values that go to make up the Good Life, the continued tradition embodied in lives like this will be an essential part of it. Grace and amenity; sagacious understanding of our fellows; cheerfulness and gaiety, neither frivolous nor unkind; modesty, bordering on humility; an abundant store of experience, temperately and dispassionately appraised, and available to those who ask—if these be lacking, to what purpose are other achievements, however cumulated? No surer test can there be of a civilization than the honor and regard it gives to those who furnish it with examples of these attainments. Let us be on guard not to fail in this, for without it the rest is vanity.

Leonard Bacon

Leonard Bacon was a poet—a first-class poet, the poet laureate of the Century. He prepared at St. George's School and graduated from Yale in 1909. In the last two hundred years some dozen men named Leonard Bacon have gone through Yale and brought honor and glory to it. These Bacons were academic people. The first of them came to America as Puritan divines, and their descendants became Congregational ministers and labored among the unregenerate New Englanders. It was an austere life, but there were intellectual compensations.

Leonard, the flowering of this background, was a truly astonishing combination of erudition and humor. He was immensely vital, a bonfire of passion. He spoke with a slight stammer and great urgency. To those who heard him and saw his wide gestures and quick changes of expression—walking about and seizing the arm of a friend to stress his points—it seemed incredible that such a wealth of expression and such a store of learning could have been crowded into one man's short life. He was gay and filled with laughter, and he was profound and possessed of understanding.

In 1941 he won the Pulitzer prize for poetry, and in that year Yale gave him an honorary degree. A little later he was elected to the American Academy of Arts and Letters. These were proper recognitions of his qualities and performances as a poet. But what he was seems even more important than what he did. For he belonged with the Titans in the great ages of the world. Aristophanes would have recognized him as a brother, and Montaigne would have welcomed him as a kindred spirit. At the Mermaid Tavern he would have been completely and uproariously at home with Marlowe, and Jonson, and Shakspere, and—never doubt—he would have been found talking with Sir Thomas More, and Raleigh, and Sidney and his sister, the Rabelaisian Countess of Pembroke.

To be this kind of a person requires vast reserves of energy and enthusiasm, and these Leonard had, and he spent them without stint. He laughed at the wise apothegm:

> Could man be drunk forever
> With liquor, love, or fights,
> Lief should I rouse at morning
> And lief lie down of nights.

In his last years his friends were exceedingly concerned with his stubborn refusal to obey the doctors who warned him of his heart condition. But those who knew him best were aware that this powerful, restless spirit that had so stimulated and delighted us all could never be cabined in a physician's prescripts. Whatever the consequences, while breath was in him he would live life to the full; and on his very last day, with the same fearless gallantry that he had shown through life, he marched to his death and to the haven where he would be.

Kennst du das Land, wo die Zitronen blühn?
Im dunkeln Laub die Gold-Orangen glühn,
Ein sanfter Wind vom blauen Himmel weht,
Die Myrte still und hoch der Lorbeer steht.

Girja Shankar Bajpai

Girja Bajpai was born in Allahabad, and studied at Oxford before entering the Indian Civil Service in 1914. Rising through the ranks, he became Secretary to the Government of India in the Department of Education, Health, and Lands. After the realm gained its independence from Great Britain, he created India's diplomatic corps and was Secretary General of Foreign Affairs from 1947 until 1952, when he was named Governor of Bombay.

Sir Girja came to reside in America in 1941, when he was appointed the first Agent General from India to the United States. Unfortunately for the Century, shortly after his election as a member in 1948 he returned to India, and so he did not become a familiar figure in the Club. When he died, he was the top foreign policy adviser to Prime Minister Nehru, and his experience and knowledge in this field were quite impossible to replace.

Sir Girja was a small, dark man, dignified in demeanor and aristocratic in appearance. He was extraordinarily interesting to talk with, and most tolerant and polite about what he must have accounted the inherent misconceptions of the Western World. He laughed easily but not loudly, and there was a suggestion of reserve about him that hedged him from having to listen to irrelevant anecdotes.

He was a very perfect gentleman.

John Lloyd Balderston

John L. Balderston was a foreign correspondent. He was born to be one. He was an undergraduate at Columbia for three years, but when the war came in 1914 he threw away his books and went to Europe as a free-lance war correspondent. The McClure Newspaper Syndicate hired him, and he had a colorful four years.

Then he went to work as foreign correspondent for the World, and he kept at that till the paper went out of existence in 1931. Then he retired from the newspaper field and took to writing plays.

He caught the spotlight in October, 1926, in London, when a brilliant first-night audience at St. Martin's Theatre applauded his play Berkeley Square. The Theatre Guild here had rejected Berkeley Square as "a play for metaphysicians." So, it was particularly pleasant. Balderston was especially skillful with making adaptations for motion pictures of novels written by others. He always seemed to know exactly what he was doing and why he was doing it.

He went to live in Beverly Hills, California. He liked it. He was interested in meats and drinks and greatly enjoyed dining well with congenial friends. In conversation he was modest and yet authoritative on subjects that he felt familiar with. One of these was professional baseball, which he had studied with the care of an Egyptologist in his own field.

All the time he was a member of the Club he lived in California, so unfortunately we did not see very much of him. This is our great loss: he was perennially young and cheerful, and on the side of the angels, and wonderfully stimulating company.

Ralph Albert Beals

Ralph A. Beals was the Director of the New York Public Library. He graduated from the University of California, Phi Beta Kappa, in 1921 and took an A.M. degree at Harvard in 1925. For ten years he was a teacher, and much involved with adult education; but in 1940 he entered the library field, after a year of study at Chicago, becoming Assistant Librarian of the Public Library of the District of Columbia. He came to the New York Public Library, as Director, in 1946, and he was elected to the Century the following year.

In an early address to the staff of the library Beals said, "I have done a good deal of research—elsewhere, and here in this very Reference Department—and at times I thought my first interest would be to work amid such rich collections as these. But much of my experience has been in adult education, and I am strongly drawn to the kind of library activity which gets books to people for general education and pleasure."

The coordination of these two units of differing function became a point of concentration for Beals, and his imagination and ingenuity in compelling the mutual support of the community branch circulating libraries and the great research library were truly amazing. His challenge to the staff commanded their intense loyalty, and many of them worked far beyond the call of duty—as he did himself.

In his short stay with the Century he was for five years a member of the Committee on Literature and served a term on the Board of Managers.

Ralph was a tall, gaunt man, with a homely face and a disarming smile. He gave a first impression of being diffident;

but it turned out to be a mannerism, and he seemed to gather energy as he talked. The substance of his conversation had the same crescendo quality, commencing with apparently casual observations and proceeding, unhurriedly, to as vigorous a presentation as the occasion warranted. He was a kind and pleasant man, devoid of any affectation, an understanding friend, and an extremely competent and consecrated servant to the City.

Poultney Bigelow

Poultney Bigelow was born in New York, the son of John Bigelow, Ambassador to France under Lincoln. While his father was stationed in France, he sent Poultney to a Potsdam preparatory school; and there the boy became well acquainted with Prince Wilhelm and his younger brother, Prince Henry. When Prince Wilhelm became Emperor, Bigelow was his guest at army maneuvers, on yachting trips, and on numerous other occasions, and these two vigorous and opinionated conversationalists over the years discussed a great variety of matters.

Poultney graduated from Yale in 1879, and from the Columbia Law School in 1882; but he never practiced law. He chose rather to travel and to write of the distinguished people he met and the remote and curious places he visited; and it was undoubtedly the German Kaiser, head of a rising colonial power, who interested his friend Bigelow in the study of colonial administration in tropical countries and inspired his travels to the ends of the earth.

Bigelow thought of himself primarily as an author, but the subjects of his writings were his travels, and he was an authority on colonial administration. In truth, he was always doing just what he wanted. His father had given him a good start, and then left him enough money so that he had no financial worries; and he lived a free life with no inhibitions. He said what he wanted to say; this made him some enemies, but it also made him a lively and exciting conversationalist and opened for him the doors of the powerful, the rich, and the learned the world over. He never held a public or an educational office, but he made his impression simply by the stark impact of his amazing personality.

He died in his ninety-ninth year—the oldest member of the Century. His father had been President of the Club, and Poultney was a member for 68 years. He used to come to the monthly meetings with great regularity, wearing a black cape, a beret set rakishly on his head, and walking erect and briskly. In the evenings he wore a black velvet jacket and a loose black tie, and when he was minded to address the members in meeting he reliably lived up to his reputation for "shocking frankness." The fact is the old man was a wonderful show—well informed, full of pith, articulate, and sophisticated.

Marston Taylor Bogert

Marston T. Bogert graduated from Columbia in 1890, and he joined the faculty there as an assistant in the organic chemistry department in 1894. He became a full professor in 1904, and retired as Professor Emeritus in 1939. He was internationally known and honored for his researches in synthetic organic chemistry, and besides his employment at Columbia he was continually involved in various important enterprises for the Government and for private chemists.

Dr. Bogert was one of the first to see that synthetic-dye plants are the source of all poison gases and that atmospheric nitrogen is the mother of all explosives. He was the nation's outstanding authority on synthetic perfumes, and his experiments on artificial violet perfume opened the way to the laboratory manufacture of synthetic vitamins.

To work with the crucibles that regroup the atoms of carbon, hydrogen, and oxygen is to face each day the possibility that some new wonder will be disclosed, some new servant found for mankind. This is more exciting than any ancient alchemist ever dreamed, and it necessarily involves concomitant responsibilities. In a 1936 speech—a decade before the dawn of the atomic age—he said, "Man must face the possibility of the extinction of life on earth by the reckless release of devastating forces." He did not seem particularly perturbed at this prospect. Indeed, we are not here by any choice of our own and it is not plain what particular merit there is in the prolonged continuance of our stay.

In any case, Dr. Bogert followed truth and taught it as he was able to find it, regardless of where it led. When his country called him to be head of the Chemical Warfare Service in World War I, he went; and when Columbia called him to the arts of peace and healing, likewise he responded. He was a good and faithful servant, and he used his great talents in the service of all of us.

Adolphe Edward Borie

Adolphe Borie was born in Philadelphia. He was of French descent, but his family had lived in Philadelphia for several generations. He was named for his uncle, who was Secretary of the Navy under President Grant, and he had a cousin of the same name who was a well-known artist.

During World War I, Borie was head of the Savage Arms Corporation, which was an important manufacturer of arms and munitions for the Allies; his administration of this corporation was recognized and remarked as exceedingly competent. After the war he became Vice-President of the Bethlehem Steel Company, and at one time he was a partner in George W. Goethals and Co., an industrial engineering firm.

He retired from active business some twenty years ago and took to traveling all over the world in every conceivable variety of conveyance. He finally settled at Santa Barbara, California, and died at the age of eighty-eight.

Thatcher Magoun Brown

Thatcher M. Brown went to Lawrenceville School and graduated from Yale in 1897. That same year he entered the banking house of Brown Brothers, and there he worked all the rest of his life. After a time he became a senior partner. He was a director of an amazingly long list of foreign insurance companies, and one of his activities was the supervision of their complicated investment problems in New York.

Besides being a banker, Thatcher was for many long years an Elder of the Madison Avenue Presbyterian Church, President of the Board of Directors of the Union Theological Seminary, and a member of the Board of Managers of the Presbyterian Hospital. To these responsibilities he brought a deep and intelligent interest and an extraordinary competence. His manner was wholly disarming, and he could preside over meetings of diverse and disparate personalities without hurting anyone's feelings.

This was, indeed, a wonderful gift that he had. He never seemed to impose his own opinion on anyone; but, when a discussion came to an end and the last word had been said, the action usually taken was what he had rather diffidently suggested at the outset.

He believed in God—not like the rest of us, in our spare time, but truly and profoundly. And this it was that led him to labor in the Lord's vineyard—in the Church, and the Hospital, and the Seminary—and prompted men to follow him with confidence.

Thatcher was at the Century a great deal after his wife died; and he had developed there a characteristic circle of congenial friends who appreciated him and were exceedingly fond of him. He was warm-hearted and friendly. He seemed to glow with just plain goodness. The Lord made his face to shine upon him and was gracious unto him.

Ludlow Seguine Bull

Ludlow Bull prepared at Pomfret and graduated from Yale in 1907 and from the Harvard Law School in 1910. He began to practice law in New York; but World War I came along and he went to France with the Yale Mobile Hospital Unit. This adventure broke the legal shackles from him; when he got back, he went to the University of Chicago and in 1922 took a Ph.D. in Egyptology.

He became an Egyptologist and went on expeditions to Egypt, Iraq, and Syria. He did research work at Yale and served as curator of its Egyptian collection with the rank of professor. He also became assistant curator, and later associate curator, at the Metropolitan Museum.

Bull had a very good time doing all these things. He was a trustee of Pomfret and of the Cathedral of St. John, and he was a member of all sorts of learned societies devoted to archaeology and oriental antiquities. He lived at Litchfield, where he had a beautiful old family house, and he worked in New York and New Haven, where he had hosts of friends. And he deserved to have friends, for he was pleasant and friendly and civilized—an old-fashioned Christian gentleman. He was affectionately called "Egypt" by Centurions, and this amused him—it was á Cleopatric familiarity comically out of keeping with the quiet dignity of his demeanor.

He used to play cowboy pool and was passably proficient at it. He would slowly circumnavigate the table, giving the impression of Napoleon surveying the taking of Ratisbon, while a rattle of ironical advice descended from the surrounding on-lookers. He served a term on the Admissions Committee, where his tolerance and sophistication were invaluable.

Bull was not only a pleasant companion; he was informed and interested in a surprising variety of matters from religion to literature, and his eminence and standing in the learned world brought lustre to the Club.

George Lister Carlisle

Lister Carlisle graduated from Yale in 1900. He started out to be a mining engineer and went down to Nicaragua and worked on a project there. Later, however, he became interested in certain problems of education and in the conservation of wild life and was elected a Director of the National Audubon Society and of the American Geographical Society.

In 1928 he organized the Carlisle-Clark African Expedition of the Museum of Natural History and spent ten months in the game country of Tanganyika in southeastern Africa taking pictures of wild animals and acquiring seven perfect lion specimens for Ackeley African Hall in the Museum—which was exactly what he had set out to do. Some ten years later he traveled overland with John H. Baker, President of the Audubon Society, through the middle of Florida; Baker remarked that Carlisle was enchanted by the beauty of the scene, with thousands of nests of wood ibis and egrets in the crowns of the 150-foot high virgin cypress trees.

Carlisle was a grave and kindly person, temperate in speech and conservative in outlook. He was exceedingly useful as a member of the boards of the two important societies of which he was a director and completely reliable when it came to putting his shoulder to the wheel and getting something done. Some years ago he retired from active work and went to live at Norfolk, Connecticut; but, in spite of his residence at a distance from the City, he was punctilious in his attendance at meetings of the boards on which he still served. He was fortunate in being sufficiently endowed so that he could follow the vocation that interested him, and the City was fortunate in having so competent a volunteer dedicated to the public service.

Edward Clark Carter

Edward C. Carter prepared at Andover and graduated from Harvard in 1900. While in college he became exceedingly interested in Christian service, and when he got out he served for two years as Secretary of Phillips Brooks House. From there he moved on to the international work of the Y.M.C.A., becoming Secretary of the National Y.M.C.A. of India from 1902 to 1908 and again from 1911 to 1917. In 1909 and 1910 he worked with the national student work in the U.S.O. With the entry of the United States into World War I, he became Chief Secretary of the Y.M.C.A. for the American Expeditionary Forces and served from 1917 to 1919.

In this position Carter showed administrative ability of the first order. His brilliant effort was, however, shadowed by the universal discontent in the armies, which found a scapegoat in voluntary agencies that could do little to defend themselves. A wave of criticism struck the Y.M.C.A. for its war effort—much of which was borne by the Chief Secretary. Surveys were made revealing a few minor faults and mistakes, but clearly substantiating the fact that the American Y.M.C.A., under Carter's leadership, performed the most fruitful work yet done for fighting men.

From the Army Y.M.C.A. Carter went to London as Foreign Secretary of the British Y.M.C.A. from 1920 to 1922. Returning to America, not wholly reconciled to the severe criticism which had been visited on him at the close of the war years, he organized The Inquiry, an association of liberals, but not pinks, to scrutinize the pressing religious and social questions of the day, and he was occupied with this till 1933.

In that year he became Secretary-General of the Institute of Pacific Relations, an enterprise that commanded the good will and support of almost all Americans who knew anything at firsthand about the Far East. Carter was primarily interested in India, where he had spent many years; but, of course, Russia is also a Pacific power, and any organization that was in contact with Russia or concerned with Russians was, as it turned out, a mark for the suspicions of the isolationists. The Institute later came in for some justified criticism and a very large amount of sheer unfounded vilification. Carter was called by the Senate Internal Security subcommittee in 1951 and subjected to the ignorant abuse, the cunning mendacity, and the undeserved castigation which have characterized these hearings.

Throughout this dreadful ordeal Carter was magnificent. He was uniformly courteous, composed, and steadfast. He apologized for nothing. He pointed out his own mistakes and acknowledged them. He unequivocally repudiated the suggestions, repeated over and over by the professional inquisitors, that he was a communist, or that he had concealed something, or that he was venal. His performance was as the sound of a trumpet to other decent men who were likewise subjected to humiliation in the Washington shambles, rousing them to courage, and resistance, and self-respect.

The reason why Carter could do these things was that he had a pure heart and so he had the strength of ten. From his undergraduate days he was moved to try helping his fellows lead a Christian life. He said, himself, he had concluded he could do this better as a layman than as a clergyman. He was a visionary in the best sense. He could find sermons in stones and good in everything. His good will and his impatience with the slow pace of progress at times allowed him to be victimized by men who had private axes to grind, but he never pursued a course for selfish gain nor took advantage of another's weakness. Those who knew him well will not forget his kindling spirit, his bravery in the face of ferocity, his capacity for work, his zeal for a better social and political order, his simple and enduring Christian faith.

Dudley Cates

Dudley Cates graduated from the University of California in 1910. In those days Hiram Johnson was battling with the powers of darkness, and Cates and his youthful friends supported him with enthusiasm.

When the First World War came, Cates went to Washington and was secretary of the Capital Issues Committee of the Treasury, and after the armistice he worked at liquidating the War Risk Insurance agency. This led to the insurance business and to a long association with Marsh & McLennan in Chicago, where he was exceedingly successful.

In 1933 he went, with General Hugh Johnson, into the N.R.A. as first assistant administrator for industry. Washington was a madhouse in those days; the depression was at its nadir; the "codes" for business were being formulated; the well-remembered Blue Eagle appeared, and everybody and every business was being regulated. Cates finally fell out with Johnson over the use of the collective bargaining sections of the Recovery Act to promote the interests of particular labor unions that were influential with the administration, and he resigned. This caused a considerable stir and made him nationally known.

After a little while he came to New York as vice president of the Commercial Investment Trust. He had full scope for his experience there, and he was fertile with ideas and imaginative and competent in finance.

In 1940 he was found to have a cancer of the larynx which required its removal. A series of major operations followed which kept him in the hospital for nearly fifteen months, during much of which time his life hung in the balance. While enduring this prolonged stay in the hospital he amused the doctors, nurses, and all those who attended him by writing Rabelaisian verse.

In 1952 he developed symptoms which proved again to be cancer. Although suffering a great deal through the summer of 1952, he followed the political conventions and campaign speeches with interest and a mounting admiration for Adlai Stevenson. On Thanksgiving Day, 1953, while in New York City with his family, he suffered a severe attack, becoming partially paralyzed. He went to the Presbyterian Medical Center at that time and never left it. For some months he knew that he would never recover and discussed his approaching end with the greatest candor.

While bedridden, he kept up an intense interest in all aspects of life and was continually visited by his friends. He was as charming a host in his hospital room as he had been in his home. And he faced the inevitable with an inspiring serenity and calm.

It could be said of him, as Francis Thompson said in his Ode to the Setting Sun: "Thou dost thy dying so triumphally." Despite his suffering, he did just that.

Henry Sloane Coffin

Henry Sloane Coffin was President of Union Theological Seminary. He was the ablest and most notable Presbyterian clergyman in America. He graduated from Yale in 1897, Phi Beta Kappa, and years later became a member of the Yale corporation. In 1900 he received a B.D. degree from Union Theological Seminary. It was natural for him to go there. His father had been general counsel for it, and he had been brought up almost in the shadow of it. In the same year he was ordained a Presbyterian minister.

In this country there seems to be a strain of endemic bigotry that continually ebbs and flows, sometimes taking one form, sometimes another. The zealots are variously fundamentalists, isolationists, Klu Kluxers, prohibitionists, and, of late, the infatuated supporters of Senator McCarthy. The malady seems to flourish particularly in the regions drained by the Mississippi River, where the social pressure to conform is as overwhelming as it is in a boys' boarding school. Dr. Coffin devoted most of his life to combating this malignant obscurantism.

After the First World War a wide disenchantment succeeded the high hopes that had supported the war effort; in this spiritual void the fundamentalists in the Presbyterian Church (and elsewhere) undertook to erect certain absolutes to which men could repair in the confidence that they were eternal and unchanging. The fundamentalists enunciated "five points"—of which, for example, the first (and not the least dogmatic) was "Biblical inerrancy." This essential article of faith insisted on a Bible verbally perfect, true in every statement.

Dr. Coffin rejected this prescript as not a teaching of the Bible, the confession of faith, nor the ancient creeds or those of the Reformation, but as, in fact, an impairment of the authority of the Bible. He also challenged the General Assembly's jurisdiction to declare essential doctrine for the Church.

It must be understood that this was not a fracas in an anthill. It was the ominous symptom of a widespread resentment of the irksomeness of thought, a tidal wave of distrust in intellectual processes.

Dr. Coffin led the liberals in the defense of Biblical scholarship, scientific research, and loyalty to truth. Harry Emerson Fosdick preached a sermon, "Shall the Fundamentalists Win?" which alerted educated men of all creeds to what was afoot. Coffin brought out "An Affirmation designed to safeguard the unity and liberty of the Presbyterian Church," a truly extraordinary example of restrained and logical ratiocination, which killed at one blow the charge that the liberal movement was negative and divisive.

Like John Hampden, when Henry Coffin drew his sword he threw the sheath away. He never ceased to war on those who seek to make men over in their own image; he never failed to fight for a common spiritual front among all of us who believe in God. In October, 1952, he and sixty prominent clergymen signed a public statement condemning "McCarthyism as representing a threat to the country second only to the Communist conspiracy." When the Episcopalians suggested a union with the Presbyterians, he swept forward to a blazing appeal for such loyalty to the spirit of Christ as would overcome the barrier of secondary differences; and what he said on the subject of church unity, speaking by invitation before the General Convention of the Episcopal Church in Cleveland in 1943, when he was himself Moderator of the Presbyterian Church in the U.S.A., was described afterward by an experienced correspondent as the most powerful address ever heard in any church assembly.

Henry Coffin was brought up in a Presbyterian family a generation ago and learned the Shorter Catechism.

"What is the chief end of man?"
"Man's chief end is to glorify God and to enjoy Him forever."

Coffin grasped the idea that to associate with God and labor in his vineyard is a joyous occupation. He worked hard and was happy. He was impatient with extremes of doctrinal speculation; and at Union Theological Seminary he made it plain that intellectual competency, rather than ritualistic conformity, was to be exacted. He was fortunate in his enemies; for, like Socrates, he was opposed by those who have a great stake in things as they are, and so will not suffer any re-examination of the accepted tenets; and these men are the mortal enemies of all of us.

Frederick Coykendall

Frederick Coykendall was born in the Hudson Valley, and all his life he lived and worked beside the River. He was President of the Cornell Steamboat Company, which operates a fleet of tugboats; but for many years his working day included two distinct phases: mornings he was occupied in making a living at the steamboat offices at West Fifty-third Street and the Hudson River, and then he would go up to the Faculty Club on Morningside Heights for lunch and work all the afternoon on the Columbia Campus for the University or its Press.

He was a Trustee of Columbia and had been Chairman of the Trustees since 1933, and he was likewise the President of the University Press. To these important positions he brought a high ability and an amount of attention that was almost incredible. He was elected a Trustee first in 1916, twenty-one years after he graduated from Columbia College, and he was still young enough to be exceedingly interested—even excited—by this honor. He, thereupon, proceeded to apply himself with the utmost diligence to finding out all about Columbia and how it was run and getting to know the important men on the faculty. As a result he rapidly became the best informed Trustee not actually on the payroll of the University, and more and more responsibility was placed on him.

He was made chairman of the Trustees' Committee on Education, and his investigation and report resulted in the University itself taking over all control of Columbia's intercollegiate athletic contests. He was the Columbia representative on the committee of three—himself, Dr. Samuel Lambert, and Mr. John G. Milburn—that negotiated the agreement with the Presbyterian Hospital to bring into being the great Medical Center; and it was largely due to Coykendall's perseverance and vision that the unit was started on a sound working basis.

These and many other special commissions he was given because the Trustees had confidence that, whatever had to be accomplished, Coykendall would do it and get it done right. And he was a marvellously successful executive. This was due in large part to his dedication to the interests of Columbia and the relentless persistence with which he attacked his tasks; but all the industry and character would not have availed much if he had not also been possessed of vast common sense. He never was anxious about being given the credit, he never was doctrinaire—only very simple and direct. He had the gift of positive statement without exciting resistance, and his great influence sprang from the confidence men had in his motives.

He was a small man physically, and it is with astonishment that many learn that he was a mighty hunter of big game and a familiar figure in the Canadian Rockies and Alaska. The solitude of such expeditions gives a balance to the lives of men of affairs that is hard to get without going far away—but, of course, one has to be that kind of a man.

In the Century, Fred Coykendall first and last served on almost every committee, including the Board of Managers and Admissions. He was exceedingly useful, always aware of what was going on about him, understanding of scholarship and the frustrations of creative work, and just as friendly and unassuming in manner as he was effective in action.

Russell Wheeler Davenport

Russell W. Davenport was born in South Bethlehem, Pennsylvania, and when he was about twelve years old a severe attack of pneumonia left him with impaired hearing. This misfortune did not seem to slow him, even as a child; but in later years he wore a mechanical hearing aid that he used to remove when parlor conversation bored him. He graduated from Thacher School in Ojai, California, in 1917 and tried to enlist for the war, but his hearing defect prevented it, and so he drove an ambulance in France. For his performance he was twice awarded the Croix de Guerre.

After the war he went to Yale and graduated in 1923. He had entered a rather dreamy stage and wrote reams of poetry and an undistinguished novel. He was exceedingly restless, tried painting at Colorado Springs, and then reporting on a paper in Spokane; but in 1930 he came back East and began working for Luce publications on the staff of Fortune. Within seven years he was managing editor. The rest of his life he worked for Luce publications, on and off—sometimes with Time magazine, sometimes with Life—and sometimes strayed into political fields or became involved with interventionist movements. He was a very useful man to have on one's side for he worked hard, was extremely resourceful, and was a real partisan who was not afflicted with doubts after the battle was joined. He hated the isolationists with a good, honest hate that glowed from inside of him; and his enthusiasm for the cause of international cooperation was certainly the key motive that explains much of his emotional intensity. His exasperation with politicians, whom he regarded as equivocators and hypocrites, sprang from the sincerity of his beliefs, and he had no sympathy with expediency that requires one to be silent in the presence of evil.

He was only fifty-four when he died—a gallant and lamented crusader.

Harold Simpson Deming

Harold Deming prepared at Andover and graduated from Harvard in 1905, summa cum laude. He graduated from the Harvard Law School in 1908, cum laude, and was an editor of the Law Review. That same year he was admitted to the Bar in New York, and was appointed an assistant United States Attorney for the Southern District. In 1912 he went into private practice, and was an active lawyer of the City all the rest of his life.

His firm was one of the leading admiralty firms, and for his many partners Deming was a tower of strength. When things got too complicated, they all went to him for advice and help. He was a calm, deliberate man with a large bony frame and a great shock of white hair. He spoke slowly, but it was all to the point; and his deep voice was at once reassuring and stimulating. He had a faculty of producing order from a confused situation, so that it could be examined and considered logically.

Harold was at the Club a great deal—especially on summer evenings. He was a faithful member of the circle that gathers on the back porch, and he was a regular pool player. He played very well and with very few words, ignoring advice and banter till he had finished his turn and then smiling broadly.

As an admiralty lawyer he was interested in Norwegian shipping, ocean commerce, and problems of double taxation that arose from international trade. In 1948 the King of Norway bestowed on him the Knight's Cross, First Class, of the Royal Order of St. Olaf, in recognition of his services to Norway and its fleet; and in 1953 he was made a Knight of the North Star by the Kingdom of Sweden.

Harold was a pleasant, comfortable person endowed with a natural dignity and repose—unhurried, friendly, and extremely kind.

Ethan Allen Dennison

Ethan Allen Dennison graduated from Erasmus Hall in Brooklyn and then went to Paris to l'École des Beaux-Arts. He returned to New York in 1905, and five years later he formed the firm of Dennison and Hirons, architects, and he practiced his profession in the City all the rest of his active life. He designed what seemed to be rather more than his fair share of bank buildings in New York, Philadelphia, Hartford, and elsewhere, and these are notable for their admirable taste and functional excellence. He got jobs the hard way: by winning competitions.

Denny was a tall, spare, handsome man. He carried himself with dignity and gave an impression of aloofness. Undoubtedly this was largely due to his deafness, which became worse as time went on. This is a disability that tends to deprive one of confidence and to inspire apprehension in one's friends. Blind men excite sympathy, but deaf people are often objects of impatience and destroyers of general conversation; and, if they are sensitive, they are aware of this. Denny used a hearing-aid when he talked with others, and he managed it so skillfully that it never bothered anybody; but conversation on these terms requires organization, and a lot of pleasant, casual remarks just go unsaid.

He was an expert cowboy pool player and he had a good time at it—intently running up a large score, quite oblivious of the raillery of the onlookers, and smiling and nodding his head at the finish. He had a delicate touch and a true eye. He could cast a fly that would deceive the oldest and wariest trout, and he was a first-class artist who won the Century Medal in the amateur show in 1949 with a watercolor of his plantation in South Carolina. He was a wonderful person to go off with alone in the woods; for then he would shed his reserve and come to talking about all the old and the new problems of mankind with a sophistication and understanding that were the exciting products of a first-rate mind and a friendly, gentle nature.

Joseph Downs

Joseph Downs graduated in 1921 from the School of the Boston Museum of Fine Arts, and then he studied in Europe on a traveling scholarship. All his life he was connected with art museums: in Boston, Philadelphia, and (after 1934) with the Metropolitan in New York. At the Metropolitan he became curator of the famous American Wing; and during his tenure the museum rounded out its collection with the colonial parlor from the old Hart house at Ipswich and the pine-paneled living room from the Samuel Wentworth house at Portsmouth.

When the Gracie Mansion in Carl Schurz Park was dedicated to be the residence of the Mayor, Joe Downs directed the installation of American furniture and art objects, among which several mayors have lived. These are replaced from time to time with others lent from the collections of the museums of the City; but the main furnishing is still the original Downs selections.

In 1949 Downs was named to be the first curator of the Winterthur Museum, in Delaware, which was founded by Henry F. duPont. This is generally recognized as containing one of the largest and richest collections of American antiques in existence, and Downs commenced to write a history of American furniture illustrated with examples from the duPont collection. He got out the first volume in 1952 but was not able to finish the work before he died.

Downs knew all about furniture, and he had a canny sense of showmanship. The exhibitions he arranged were amazingly interesting, and each seemed to have a coherence and unity that provoked in the patrons a desire to learn more about the subject. He bought himself an old house at Guilford, Connecticut and filled it with treasures that amused him. His friends used to gather there, and Joe would tell them yarns of how he had acquired some of his extraordinary pieces. He was a shy man, and in his own house he was happy and forthcoming, surrounded by things of beauty that were a joy forever to him.

Edward Mead Earle

Edward M. Earle graduated from Columbia College with highest honors in 1917. Then he went off to the First World War. In 1920 he joined the Columbia faculty as lecturer in history, and in 1923 he took his Ph.D. degree there. His brilliant dissertation, Turkey, the Great Powers, and the Bagdad Railway, gave him something of a reputation in Europe as well as in the United States. Then, in 1927, tuberculosis hit him. He was flat on his back for years: Saranac, Colorado Springs, Johns Hopkins. He would have died, but his wife pulled him through. She never gave up, and she never let him give up; and finally he did make a comeback and got practically well.

He left Columbia in 1934 to become professor of history at the Institute for Advanced Study at Princeton, and that was his principal employment the rest of his life.

He said of himself that he was a "specialist in military affairs and American foreign relations"; and this more accurately describes him than calling him a professor of history. He lectured at the military staff colleges, both in America and in England. And when the Second World War came, he was detailed as special consultant to the Commanding General of the Army Air Forces and went overseas. It was the present, the world around him, that was always his primary interest, and history was for him a means for understanding the immediate situation better. In this he reveals the influence of James Harvey Robinson, who was at the height of his powers when Earle was an undergraduate.

To the Office of Strategic Services in Washington he was indispensible, and he was long a member of the Board of Analysts there. His services to his country earned for him the Presidential Medal for Merit and the rank of Chevalier of the Legion of Honor. He walked with princes and scholars and commoners; and the commoners knew him, not as one who walked with princes and scholars, but as a man whose sole concern apparently was to walk with them. In truth, he liked people, and people—of every class and calling—liked him; and thus it came about that he never seemed to have to meet the age-old distrust of the American for the scholar. His last illness began on the day when Columbia, his old alma mater, gave him an honorary degree. In his death scholarship has lost one of its finest exemplars, and humanity, a great human being.

George Harold Edgell

Harold Edgell graduated from Harvard in 1909, and took the Ph.D. in Fine Arts in 1913. He received an honorary Doctorate in Arts in 1948. Most of the time, he lived in Boston; but he had a farm at Newport, New Hampshire, where he spent summers.

He was appointed to the Harvard faculty as Assistant in Fine Arts on his graduation, and in 1925 he became a full professor. For a decade he was Dean of the Faculty of Architecture. He was a distinguished historian of architecture and published authoritative books about it; but, as time went on, his interest turned more and more to painting, and in 1935 he became Director of the Boston Museum of Fine Arts. To this important post he brought not only the lustre of the name of a leading figure in the international art world, but an extraordinary competence in administration. He was inevitably drafted for various public services—Chairman of the Massachusetts State Art Commission, President of the American Association of Museums, President of Phi Beta Kappa, Overseer of Harvard—and to serve as visiting professor to the American Academy in Rome and as exchange professor at the Sorbonne.

Harold was not a creative artist. He was a curator, a critic, an expositor; but within this field the range of his activities was phenomenal. He got around very fast; he knew everybody and everybody knew him; he was full of enthusiasm, not only for art, but for talking and laughing and eating and drinking. He was gay, and educated, and civilized. He performed enterprises of great pith and moment without outward and visible effort; as though by some black magic, he could, indeed, bind the sweet influences of Pleiades, or loose the bands of Orion. Like Achilles, he must have been dipped in some magic river that rendered him invulnerable while fulfilling his appointed destiny, for he pursued the course with flying feet and came safe at the last to the haven where he would be.

Irwin Edman

Irwin Edman graduated from Columbia College in 1917, and always thereafter that was his home, his workshop, and his great wellspring of inspiration. He was a bachelor; and so he could pursue his thoughts and speculations into the long night watches when conscript fathers must recruit their strength for the morrow's tasks.

After he graduated, he became an instructor and then professor of philosophy. He assumed to be puzzled over what philosophy is all about; but he knew at least as much as anybody else about it, and there was a subtle method in his confusion that made his students become aware that Edman's philosophy was really the expression of our common human nature. He appeared to be absent-minded, but here also he exercised a hard-headed discretion about it that made him unexpectedly hard to impose on. From an early age his eyesight was very poor, but he compensated for this by an astounding capacity for memorizing whole pages of prose and verse by a single reading.

His friendships stretched around the world. He knew Somerset Maugham and Santayana; his discourse delighted the Athenaeum in London (of which he was a member), and he lectured at the Sorbonne on the nature of humor, with English examples rendered into French wit.

Combined with his semiblindness was a physical clumsiness that occasionally made new students nervous. His right hand usually did not know what his left hand was doing, and it seemed a close thing, sometimes, whether he would put the chalk in his mouth or simply lose it in a trouser pocket. Edman was entirely aware of these attributes. He regarded himself objectively, with a kind of affectionate amusement; and his students progressed from a patronizing tolerance to a respectful and adoring admiration.

With his coevals Edman was courageous and clear; and it came as a surprise to some how intensely practical his judgment was as regards university policies and faculty problems. His outstanding gift was as an expositor; and he learned for himself something of Santayana's lucid style, and cultivated a similarly humane and smiling attitude toward life. His spirit was gentle, and it is almost bewildering that his never-ending insistence upon the need for a richer cultural life in this country should have had so profound an impact.

Irwin was at the Century a great deal. He liked it and had a good time there. He went to Europe every summer, and in London he repaired to the Garrick and the Athenaeum, where he found men like himself with whom he was intimate and congenial. A few months ago his old housekeeper, Maria, died. She was very strict with Irwin and solicitous for his health, and he was exceedingly upset to lose her. Indeed, the resulting adjustment had not been accomplished when he, too, died, in his fifty-eighth year. This was a very great calamity. His talents and manners were wholly suitable to an elder statesman, and he could have grown old gracefully, happily, and most useful.

Personality is mysterious, and its elements imponderable. His friends must ask themselves how it came that Irwin Edman, so amusing, so provocative, so pleasant and friendly, could speak with such authority that the young men of the land should see visions and the old men dream dreams.

William Maxwell Evarts

William M. Evarts was born in New York, the son of a clergyman. His grandfather, for whom he was named, was a member of the Century for more than fifty years.

Evarts prepared at St. Paul's School, and graduated from Harvard in 1909. He graduated, cum laude, from the Harvard Law School in 1912, and came to New York to practice. As with all the young lawyers of the time, his law work was interrupted by the war—he went to France in the Field Artillery—but 1925 saw him a partner in the firm of Murray, Prentice & Aldrich, and with that firm and its successors he worked the rest of his life.

Evarts was an exceedingly competent lawyer. He worked with a dedication that amounted almost to fanaticism. He was entirely certain of the rightness, not only of what he was doing himself, but also of what his clients were doing. This is somewhat uncommon among good lawyers, who come to regard the activities of their clients with a detachment that involves neither approval nor disapproval. Evarts, however, was convinced that the great banks and their owners were making vital contributions to the relations of men and that society was fortunate to command such services.

These fundamental beliefs clothed Evarts with a moral fervor that made him a formidable person to disagree with. He never questioned that the Republican party was the only party fit to govern, and his impatience with doctrinaire do-gooders led him into passionate discussions that sometimes produced more heat than light—to the discomfiture of less warlike disputants.

If Bill was irascible, he was also extremely kind. If he was urgent, he was also loyal and sensitive and understanding. No friend ever asked his help in vain. For his clients he spent his health and strength without stint, mercilessly driving himself till the task was done.

Only the passionate are worth associating with. Most of humanity are docile sheep—cautious, calculating, discreet, incapable of either heroism or crime. The fire burned bright in Evarts. He was not always right, but he was always unafraid.

Charles Ewing

Charles Ewing was born in 1872. He was destined to be an architect; and in due course he arrived at the Beaux Arts, where he got to know all the contemporaries of Trilby, including Billy Delano. Everybody was young. Life was joyful. Charley lived at No. 5 rue St. Benoit, with George Chappell.

When he left Paris he made a partnership with Chappell, and for many years they practised architecture in New York.

Among other things, they built the Architects' Building at 101 Park Avenue. After Chappell died, Ewing moved to Boston and had a summer house in Maine; he did not get around to the Club very often.

Charley had gifts as a water-colorist; and he, Grosvenor Atterbury, and some other architects who liked to paint and draw, started a little club which met once a year at the Century and displayed their artistic talents at a dinner-party. There was a president elected for one year's term, who was known as the Chief Digressor and who was responsible for the club's gatherings. Bronze medals were awarded; competition was keen; and Charley Ewing was always in the front ranks. Frank Crowninshield, who often served on the juries who passed on the contests, presented a silver cup to be given to members who wrote light verse or sang; and the winner retained possession for a year. The records of these gay meetings were unfortunately lost when George Chappell died; but "The Digressionists" are still going strong.

Charley was always much interested in the Century, and served on the Board of Management and the House Committee. He was intermittently involved with the Gallery and once got up a very special exhibition, with Charley Lay, that was designed to show that modern pictures could be used in Georgian or earlier houses. Whether or not this contributed importantly to the sum of human knowledge, it was a lot of fun.

He was a quiet and unassuming person with a disarming smile. His friends were warm and devoted, and he moved through life happy and tranquil.

John Palmer Gavit

John Palmer Gavit was an old-time journalist; but when he was young he studied at the Hartford and the Chicago Theological Seminaries, and this seems to have given his interests a sociological twist. He worked on the Albany Evening Journal and on The Hartford Courant, and then he was in Washington for a time.

In 1913 he became managing editor of The New York Evening Post, which was owned by Oswald Villard. This was an astonishing example of anarchy in operation. The other editors included Rollo Ogden, Alexander Dana Noyes, and H. I. Brock. None of the editors took any suggestions either from each other nor from Mr. Villard, and Gavit's life was neither simple nor easy. He was a tough-minded man, however, and survived nearly ten years of it.

Gavit wrote books on education and on international affairs. He had lively ideas in these fields, and, although he was not learned, he was stimulating and well informed. Dartmouth gave him an honorary L.H.D. in 1935. He was a trustee of Rollins College and went to live at Winter Park when he retired many years ago.

It was to have been expected that he would belong to the Gridiron Club, and the National Press, and various organizations of that kind—which he did—but it is curious that he was a trustee of the American Society for Psychical Research, for the interests and members of this Society are about as far removed from the turmoil of the newspaper business as a Trappist community.

Personality is mysterious and its elements imponderable. When the morning stars sing together, we shall sit every man under his vine and under his fig tree.

Herbert Dudley Hale

Dudley Hale was born in Paris where his young father was studying to be an architect. He was descended from Edward Everett Hale and Edward Everett, and his family had been a distinguished one in America for a long time.

Dudley graduated from Harvard in 1914 and became a reporter for The Boston Transcript. Then he was taken away as a soldier to the Mexican border. When the United States became involved in the First World War, he was commissioned a lieutenant in the Air Force (Aviation Department, it was then called) and went overseas to fight in France. After the war he went back again to writing copy.

In 1940 he joined R.K.O.-Pathé as a script writer for newsreels, and from this he got to working on films for government departments in the Foreign Information Program. He was very good at this. He had literary facility of a high order. He was interested in words, whether spoken or written, and he took the trouble to express his scripts and to organize them on a level quite out of the ordinary.

Most unfortunately for the rest of us, he died in the same year he was elected to the Century, so he did not become a familiar figure in the Club. He was a friendly, responsive man. He loved to talk and he liked to hear others talk, and he had a flavor of simplicity about him that was reassuring to the shy.

Augustus Noble Hand

Augustus Noble Hand was one of the ablest American judges. He was born in 1869 in Elizabethtown, New York, on the fringe of the Adirondacks. He was ready for college at fourteen; but his father sent him to Exeter for a year, and he then entered Harvard in the Class of 1890. He graduated magna cum laude. His father and his grandfather were both lawyers, and his grandfather was a judge. After a year in his father's office, Hand attended the Harvard Law School and graduated in 1894 with honors. He practiced in New York City and became a member of his uncle's law firm.

In 1914 President Wilson appointed him a Judge of the United States District Court for the Southern District of New York, and in 1927 President Coolidge appointed him a Circuit Judge. Hand was a Democrat, and he humorously remarked that President Coolidge was glad to promote him and put a Republican in his place in the lower court, which alone had any considerable patronage.

Judge Hand was born to be a judge. He was a man of great force, and his opinions were characterized by their clarity, directness, and brevity. On the bench he was courteous and patient, and he never fell within Bacon's injunction against a much-speaking judge. He administered the routine of the court-room casually, without effort or hesitation, by simple force of character. He had little love of ratiocination. He made up his mind and rarely changed it. He had many of the traits of a country lawyer. His speech was slow and unadorned; his silences were heavy and unhurried. He separated the background of his judgments from the foreground of his opinions so that the latter were free of pedantry or parade of book-learning.

Like Erasmus, Hand was entirely aware that he lived in a revolutionary age, but he had no disposition to lead the rebels. He regarded change as inevitable and to be accepted, and he devoted his efforts to moderating the intolerance of over-sure prophets of the millennium.

On Saturdays Judge Hand would come to the Century for lunch. He was marvellously pleasant company. He would talk about anything in the world. He was a big, heavy man, and it was slightly surprising how far to the left he seemed to be: from his appearance one would have half expected he would be conventional, even stuffy; but he had a lively mind and a liberal point of view, and he not only entertained new ideas with equanimity but he was disconcertingly willing to try them out.

He was a strong and liberal churchman, the Senior Warden of Grace Church.

Alfred Harcourt

Alfred Harcourt graduated from Columbia College in 1904 and immediately went to work for Henry Holt, the publisher. He worked for Holt and Company for fourteen years, after which time Harcourt knew all about publishing books, whereas Mr. Holt knew how it used to be. After the First World War, Harcourt went to London and brought back Bertrand Russell's Roads to Freedom. Mr. Holt read the manuscript and suggested that if Harcourt wanted to print so radical an attack on accepted conventions he start his own firm.

So Harcourt established a firm with Donald Brace: Harcourt, Brace and Company. In the course of thirty years they published books by Russell, Sinclair Lewis, Papini, Keynes, Sandburg, and a score of other first-class writers of the period. Harcourt got around with great imagination. He built a textbook department, he developed a library market and a juvenile department, and he paid competent attention to marginal matters like magazine rights. He took care of his authors and they trusted him implicitly.

Terrible things happened sometimes. By mistake five hundred sets of sheets of the biography P. T. Barnum were bound up in the covers of Papini's Life of Christ, and five hundred sets of Papini's Life of Christ were bound in the Barnum covers. All the defective sets were shipped out without the mistake being discovered. Not one single complaint was ever received nor a copy of either book returned for exchange!

To be a successful publisher is great fun. One meets authors, journalists, hacks, and starry-eyed enthusiasts determined to shake the world. Harcourt worked hard, made it all go famously, and retired to California in 1942. Unfortunately he did not join the Century until 1950, and so he did not become a familiar figure in the Club; but he knew the printers-ink circle there, and when he came in they were glad, and he was joyful, and it was pleasant.

Richard Carley Hunt

Richard Carley Hunt was born in Paris in 1886, his parents being Pearl Carley and Richard Howland Hunt, who was then studying architecture at the Beaux-Arts. As a result of the geographical circumstances of his birth, Hunt carried on for some years a brisk international correspondence with the French military authorities, who, applying the French doctrine of nationality, sought to require him to serve in the French military forces. The French Army finally gave up and accepted Hunt's view, and he announced to his friends that thereafter he could visit France without facing the prospect of spending months or years in the French caserne.

He graduated cum laude from the Yale Law School in 1908 and began the practice of law in New York, making a firm in 1914 with William M. Chadbourne and Albert F. Jaeckel.

In the early days he devoted himself primarily to the organization, assembling, and reorganization of railroads and public utilities. In that field his gifts of clear analysis and concise statement of the questions to be determined were widely recognized.

He was an enthusiastic and exceedingly competent fisherman and took endless trouble to go where salmon are to be found—not only to the St. Lawrence watershed but to Spain, Ireland, and Norway. In his later years one of his great regrets was that arthritis prevented his visiting his beloved salmon waters. He made a study of the life of the salmon and became an authority on dry-fly salmon fishing; he was the author of a standard book on the subject called Salmon in Low Water.

Hunt was born to be a Centurion, if that good fortune can await anyone, for his grandfather, Richard Morris Hunt, and his father, Richard Howland Hunt, both distinguished architects, were Centurions before him. And, like his forebears, Dick Hunt was a worthy member of the Good Companions—friendly, responsive, and full of fun.

Robert Edmond Jones

Robert E. Jones was born in Milton, New Hampshire, and lived there until he went to Harvard in the Class of 1910. When he was a child, he could draw most remarkably well, and at Harvard his chosen field was fine arts. While at college, he played the violin in the university orchestra, and he became pleasantly involved with the Harvard Dramatic Club. From these random beginnings Bobby Jones went on to become the foremost stage and scene designer of America.

Before 1915 the American theater was quite unaware of the new stagecraft that had been born in Western Europe.

Most theatrical producers were in the habit of calling on scenic studios that carried a card catalogue of stock sets: "center door, fancy—middle class," with a lithograph picture and the price. Jones had read at Harvard about the new developments in Europe, particularly in connection with the the magnificent settings for Wagner's operas, and he went to Germany to study them.

In 1915 a play by Anatole France, The Man Who Married a Dumb Wife, was produced on Broadway. Jones had done the scenery, and his demonstration of the possibilities of stagecraft dumbfounded the sophisticated audience. Jones never lacked employment afterwards.

His basic idea was that the scenery should not hold a mirror up to nature, but should be so contrived as to enhance visually the theme of the play; and he brought to this difficult assignment a soaring imagination that made the designer no less important to the production than the director himself. For him the theater was not a duplication of life; it was rather an extension of it, heightened in color and sharpened in meaning. Drab scenes took on a lustre and mystery and became distinguished under his quickening touch.

He spoke well—better than he wrote—and he was a good show giving a lecture. His face was pale, his hair black, and for some years he wore a beard that gave a fine "Left Bank" atmosphere. He loved life and laughter, and his smile was ready and friendly. His reactions were violent, never neutral, never cold, and his enthusiasm lifted mediocre talents around him to a high level of craftsmanship. His driving hope was to give the theater glory and dignity and excitement; and he did this again and again in visual terms as no one else has done in our time.

Carl Kelsey

Carl Kelsey was born in 1870 at Grinnell, Iowa. He graduated from Grinnell College (then called Iowa College) in 1890, studied in Europe, and subsequently completed the work for the doctorate in sociology at the University of Pennsylvania in 1903. He joined the faculty of Pennsylvania in 1903 and taught there until his retirement as professor emeritus in 1942.

During all his years of teaching in Philadelphia at the University of Pennsylvania, Kelsey lived on a small farm near the town of Mendenhall, Pennsylvania, not far from Kennett Square. He loved all plants that he could grow—trees, shrubs, flowers, and even vegetables. Practically all of his spare daylight hours were spent in gardening. Most of all, he was fond of peonies, and for years had several acres of them. He made money out of this hobby, for he was usually able to bring his plants into bloom in time to catch the Decoration Day market.

His favorite summer recreation was driving a car to California. He seemed to need an excuse for these trips and explained that he made them to see his sister who taught school in Berkeley. Actually, he simply enjoyed wandering all over the country in an automobile, always trying to find new roads and avoiding main highways whenever possible. His greatest enjoyment was to explore the worst roads in the least settled areas of the West.

Kelsey brought to the University of Pennsylvania a synthesis of New England asceticism and Midwestern meliorism. He was a resolute individualist. In politics and economics he was a conservative, but he had also been a reformer and was sometimes considered a radical. He was a critic of capitalism who had read Karl Marx intensively, but he rejected collectivism and deplored the New Deal. Among his neighbors in rural Pennsylvania he was suspected of practicing "socialism" on his excursions to the city. Among congenial urban companions he was not only a scholar but a naturalist, bridge player, and amateur billiardist of superlative skill. His anecdotes were as sharp as his paradoxes. His independence will be a lasting monument in the memories of his students and colleagues.

The citation for an honorary degree of Doctor of Letters conferred on him by the University of Pennsylvania during its bicentennial celebration in 1940 reads in part: "Vigorous teacher and administrator with rare ability in the selection and training of men, his dynamic leadership has moulded one of the University's strongest departments, and his relation of social sciences to geography and biology is a major contribution to knowledge."

James Truesdell Kilbreth

James T. Kilbreth graduated from Harvard, summa cum laude, in 1894 and from the Columbia Law School in 1897. His father was Collector of the Port of New York, and James was associated with the City all his life. He was a member of the firm of Oudin, Kilbreth and Schackno, which had offices down on Pine Street.

He lived at Woodmere, and later at Hewlett, and used to play golf at the Rockaway Hunting Club. For some years he was a trustee of the Village of Hewlett. He remarked himself that his law practice was for the most part quiet and uneventful, but at one time "the even tenor of professional life was whipped up by organization and legal management of a world sulphur cartel, including Italian problems involving many trips abroad." For his labors in this connection he received the decoration, Officer of the Crown of Italy.

Kilbreth was a gentleman of the old school, and wore a high starched collar to the last. He was a top-notch scholar, and in his old age took up the study of Greek—like Cato. At the Century he had a circle of cronies his own age, and they used to lunch together often, swapping stories and gossip, and complaining gently about the modern progress down the primrose path that is wont to become noticeable as we grow older.

Henry Hobart Knox

Henry H. Knox was born in New York and educated at the Royal School of Mines at Freiberg, Saxony. He was a geologist and mining engineer and lived the early part of his life in London and there practiced his profession.

He came back to America to do some work as an assayer for Phelps Dodge and Company, and was elected to the Century in 1908. He went out West, however, first to Arizona and then to California, and took up a general consulting practice in engineering, which kept him on the Pacific Coast, so he seldom came to the Club—even Daniel cannot remember him.

For the last forty years he lived in retirement at Santa Barbara, and there in his ninetieth year he died and there he is buried. Some fellow Centurions, living in Santa Barbara, knew him well and report that he was an extremely pleasant, friendly man with a remarkable interest in modern science, and that he followed the discoveries and developments in electronics with an informed competence.

George William Kosmak

George W. Kosmak was born, raised, and educated in New York. He graduated from Columbia College in 1894 and from the College of Physicians and Surgeons in 1899. He was a gynecologist and obstetrician. When he began to work in this field the deaths of mothers in childbirth in the United States were more than 65 per 1000 live births. In 1950 the mortality rate had fallen to less than 9. Part of this astounding accomplishment was undoubtedly due to the discovery and employment of the new miracle drugs like penicillin; but in large part it is due to the persistent and relentless efforts of Dr. Kosmak.

The collection of the precise data in the field was difficult; but Kosmak finally got an appropriation from the Commonwealth Fund, and a thoroughly competent committee of doctors was appointed to investigate the subject with him. They made a report to the New York Academy of Medicine in 1933 that clearly indicated 65 percent of maternal deaths were actually preventable, and that in these the fault lay with the physician in 61 percent. The report was received first with amazement, then with indignation, and then it was recognized by the profession as a challenge, which was nobly accepted and met.

The courage and perseverance which produced this revolution in obstetrics were in great part due to Dr. Kosmak. He was himself a superlatively competent physician, and he was a veritable tower of strength in organizing the dissemination of accurate information and exacting the highest standards from practitioners. Where he led the way no one was afraid to follow, and the modern science of obstetrics is his enduring monument.

John Marshall Lowrie

John Lowrie was born and educated in the Middle West, graduating from Knox College in 1908; the following year he took a master's degree in the field of political science at the University of Illinois. He had planned to go on to Harvard for a doctorate in the same subject, as his elder brother had done, but he fell under the influence of Thomas Reed Powell, who was then teaching at Illinois, and in consequence went to the Columbia Law School, where he graduated in 1912.

He then gave up all idea of becoming a teacher of government and went to work practicing law for the Cravath firm. In 1917 he formed a firm of his own, in which he was a partner. In 1930 he transferred to Chicago and practiced law there for some years, but in 1934 he moved to Galesburg, where he became a trustee of Knox College and where he lived and worked the rest of his life.

Lowrie was a clever and competent lawyer. He was an editor of the Columbia Law Review, and, undoubtedly, if he had stayed in New York, he would have become one of the leaders of the corporation bar. It is a testimony to his enterprise that when he found he wanted to do something different he pulled out of the rut and followed the course of empire westward. He was excellent company. He had a mordant wit that was a source of great entertainment to the tough-minded brethren but sometimes scandalized the sensitive. Withal, he was merry and amusing, a good friend, and a lively, vital talker.

Parker McCollester

Parker McCollester prepared at Exeter and graduated from Tufts, where he was Phi Beta Kappa, in 1911. In 1914 he graduated from the Harvard Law School.

He began law practice in Boston; but in 1916 he became Assistant General Solicitor of the New York Central Railroad, and this employment lasted for ten years, during which time he became thoroughly familiar with problems involving freight rates and the government regulation of carriers by land and sea. He had great success in this field, and later, when he came to New York, he practiced before the Interstate Commerce Commission and the Federal Maritime Board and was recognized as an exceedingly competent specialist.

He worked hard, but he found time and strength to do a lot of other things besides law. He was a trustee of Exeter, of Tufts, of Barnard, and of the Juilliard School of Music. He was also director and secretary of the Philharmonic-Symphony Society. He was full of music and an excellent 'cellist, and used to play in string quartets with his friends. At an "Information Please" evening at the Century a decade ago, he and Walter Damrosch knew so much more about all kinds and conditions of music than all the rest of the Club put together that it was fantastic.

Parker was a polite and civilized person. He was a most remarkably good lawyer, and he was also a kind and loyal friend. He was discreet about what was told him, and temperate and restrained in his speech. His father was a New England clergyman, but Parker was a metropolitan skeptic and very doubtful about any of the accepted tenets. His emotions found expression in music rather than religion. He liked movement, and his briefs presented an orderly progression from the premise to the conclusion, the course characterized by judgment and common sense rather than by originality. He made fewer mistakes than most of us—perhaps because he was modest, and unselfconscious, and knew what he was talking about. But set him down with another musician and they would tire the sun with talking and send him down the sky.

Walter Butler Mahony

Walter B. Mahony graduated from Amherst in 1898 and from the New York University Law School in 1903. He was minded to be a lawyer and started to practice in the City. His work was largely with plantation rubber interests, and he drifted away from the law and into various important administrative positions with the larger rubber corporations.

On the uncommercial side, he was president of the Institute for the Education of the Blind, a trustee of Roosevelt Hospital and of the First Presbyterian Church, and, for ten years, the owner and publisher of the North American Review.

Mahony was married to the sister of President Butler, and he used to get a good deal of amusement out of this relationship. He was descended on his father's side from the family that has owned Dromora Castle in Ireland for 250 years, and through his mother he was the great-great-grandson of Justin Morgan of Vermont, owner of the famous race horse that bore his name. His ancestors also included William White of the Mayflower. These fortuitous constellations in his horoscope were likewise a source of considerable entertainment to Mahony.

He was a useful and diligent citizen. He did not come to the Club very much and, so, never established himself with any particular group, but he was good company and very welcome wherever he chose to sit.

Reginald Marsh

Reginald Marsh was born in Paris. His father painted murals and his mother painted miniatures. He graduated from Yale in 1920, and after that, he remarks himself, he "painted full time in many mediums, but generally with restricted subject matter, such as Coney Island Beach, the burlesque, the subway." He lived in New York, and he loved it. It intoxicated him. He never wanted to leave it even for a day. He had a studio at One Union Square, and there he would always be found during the day painting or drawing or sculpturing—or looking down over the City with a telescope. He worked very rapidly, multiplying scenes and figures in profusion and passing without interruption from one easel to another. He did not depict figures at home, or in offices, factories, sweat shops, or stores. They were out in the streets and the parks, on merry-go-rounds, at the burlesque, down by the docks—all animated with hectic movement and urgency, nervous, shadowy, unreal. He had the illustrative and reportorial approach that Goya recommended when he said that an artist should be able, on seeing a man fall from a scaffold, to observe and set down the attitude of his body in mid-air.

A rather silent man with a physical resemblance to Winston Churchill, he said very little, but he took in everything going on around him. When he spoke, it was out of the corner of his mouth; but, if you could hear what he said, it was good.

During the war he and Bouché volunteered to entertain the wounded at Halloran Hospital under the wing of the ladies of the Red Cross. The good ladies thoroughly briefed the artists before they were introduced to the soldiers, and said, among other things: "No drawings of nudes, please." Marsh winked at Bouché. After an hour, a ward of happy men encased in plaster casts were proudly exhibiting to each other the frescoes of lush, nude beauties sketched on their white armor, and art was serving the function of delight, which the Creator must always have intended.

A great monument to Marsh is the ceiling of the Custom House at Bowling Green. In this gigantic mural he incorporated all the best features of his art with an ease and coherence that are astounding. He was inspired by New York. It was this glamorous, magic city, woven on the warp of a hundred foreign cities, multicolored with races, and kinds, and creeds, its people molded by its influence yet paradoxically individualized by its vastness, that Reggy loved and painted.

Everett Victor Meeks

Everett V. Meeks graduated from Yale in 1901, and in 1917 he received a Bachelor of Fine Arts degree there. From 1902 to 1904 he studied architecture at Columbia, and then he spent four years at l'École des Beaux-Arts. Returning from Paris, he began to practice architecture in New York and became a member of the firm of Carrère and Hastings.

He joined the Yale faculty in 1916, and then in the succeeding thirty years he served as Professor of Architecture, as Dean of the School of Fine Arts, and as Director of the Yale Art Gallery. He was a pioneer in the reorientation of architectural education in America during the 1920's and in establishing a close and fruitful relationship between the training of the architect, the painter, and the sculptor in the spirit of the Beaux-Arts tradition. During these years, when the Beaux Arts Institute and the Rome Prizes had their greatest prestige, the School of Fine Arts at Yale was a consistent winner of these awards. In architecture, outstanding students were attracted to Yale from other schools, and Dean Meeks was the benevolent friend and guide to all of them in the beginning of their professional careers.

With the coming of the financial depression and the growing impact of the modern movement, concepts in art and architectural education underwent a drastic change, and Dean Meeks gradually changed the curriculum and the teaching personnel of his school with the tide. He was a firm believer in the use of the practicing architect and artist as teacher, and one of his greatest contributions to his own school, and to architectural education in general, was the employment of visiting critics who could each bring to the students' own drafting boards the accumulated perspective of his own professional experience. His contributions to architectural education in this regard remain as a continuing memorial and reminder of his vision and imagination.

Meeks was a bachelor. He wore a beard and mustache and could think and speak as fast and accurately in French as in English. These attributes lent a slightly foreign flavor to his technique that provoked interest and attention. When he talked to students about classical art, they wanted to go to Europe and see these things for themselves. He was called "conservative"; but he insisted that fundamentals must come first and that it was no part of the function of a school of architecture to develop bizarre specializations.

He retired in 1947, and came to live at the Yale Club in the City. There he continued to act on various boards and committees and had a kind of window on the world of art and education from which he could observe and where he was happily content.

William Pierson Merrill

William P. Merrill graduated from Rutgers in 1887 and from Union Theological Seminary in 1890. In that year he was ordained a Presbyterian minister, and his first pastorate was in Philadelphia. From there he went to Chicago, where he spent sixteen years, and in 1911 he came to New York as pastor of the Brick Presbyterian Church. Unlike many clergymen, Dr. Merrill always insisted that Chicago was not the most sinful city in the country.

In Chicago he had been moderator of the Chicago Presbytery, and in New York, in 1941 and 1942, he was likewise elected moderator. He was one of the best known clergymen in the City. He became a leader in the movement for international peace and amity, but he was under no delusion that if only there were enough good will available then all would be well with the world. "Unless we wrestle mightily for the liberty of others, we shall not preserve our own," he said in support of resisting the Communist occupation of the little nations.

This militancy was woven into the fabric of his being, and it was expressed in divers ways. He wrote and composed the music for a number of excellent hymns, the best known of which is Rise up, O Men of God—recently voted the most popular hymn in the Church of England.

When he came to the City, the Brick Church was at the corner of Fifth Avenue and Thirty-seventh Street. Twenty-five years later it moved to Park Avenue and Ninety-first Street, where it is now. The move was hard work, and coming on top of all his other labors it broke Dr. Merrill's back. He resigned in 1938 and became Minister Emeritus. The release from active responsibilities somewhat restored his health. He was able to continue with the church for sixteen years, teaching Bible Classes, preaching a few times each year, the warm friend of old and new members of the congregation, and a continuing link between the past and the present.

Dr. Merrill was a member of the Century for forty-two years. He was a charming person. He had an uncomplicated nature, apparently free from festering doubts or inward tensions. He did his duty in that state of life to which God had called him, and he did it very well indeed.

Harry Morton Merriman

Mort Merriman was the head of a big textile combine and was director of various corporations important in the silk and cotton trade, but these occupations were collateral to his real calling. He was a sailor. He was not only a past master of sailing; he was quite mad about it. He cruised up and down the Atlantic coast in his little schooner, "Norseman," from Nova Scotia to Cuba—sometimes alone, more often with friends. Long ago he lost an arm in a hunting accident, but, at that, he was a better man on a boat than are most men with two good arms.

During World War I he served as Commander in the navy submarine patrol. The rule concerning physical defects were waived by special direction of the President. He was universally respected by his juniors and never unduly awed by superiors. He here acquired the nickname, "Skipper," which most of his friends called him. He was a Director of Yachting magazine and President of the Marine Museum of the City of New York.

For the last decade, Merriman lived on his farm on the Eastern Shore of Maryland. The latch was always out, and friends used to come and go and sail with the old man up and down Chesapeake Bay. He was vigorous and friendly, and a perfectly delightful companion on a boat or anywhere else. Whenever he came into the Century the other sailors would gather round, drawn by some invisible force that acts on them that go down to the sea in ships and occupy their business in great waters. And they would spin yarns, and recall days off the Maine coast, and refresh themselves, and laugh gently.

Thus runs the world away.

Herman Otto Mosenthal

Herman O. Mosenthal graduated from Columbia College in 1899 and from the College of Physicians and Surgeons four years later. His father was Joseph Mosenthal, the famous musician, who was also a member of the Century.

As a young man, Mosenthal was an outstanding scholar, and, as a young physician, he was industrious beyond any ordinary man. He had the feeling of an artist for perfection, and he was early recognized at the New York Hospital, where he served as interne, and at the Vanderbilt Clinic as the coming leader in internal medicine.

All his life he was associated with the great hospitals of the City: he was Assistant Visiting Physician at Presbyterian; Professor of Clinical Medicine at the New York–Post-Graduate School when it was a part of Columbia University; and Attending Physician at the New York–Post-Graduate Hospital. He was the prime authority of the time on diabetes and nephritis and President of the American Diabetes Association in 1941 and 1942.

Dr. Mosenthal had a charming and winning personality. His diction and manner on the lecture platform, while most precise, were also disarming and penetrating, and his contributions to medical literature were of first importance. He had a wonderful capacity for making friends, and he could differ sharply in discussion without inducing resistance or resentment. He seemed to understand mankind thoroughly and to regard his fellows with benign interest and a never failing affection.

Godfrey Nicholas Nelson

Godfrey N. Nelson was born in Sweden and came to America with his parents when he was an infant. He went to the public schools in New York and then to Adelphi College in Brooklyn. He was admitted to the Bar in 1904 and a little later was certified as a chartered accountant. In this dual role he became an expert in taxation problems, and in the First World War he was associated as a counsel with the Excess Profits Tax Committee in Washington under the Commissioner of Internal Revenue. After the war he joined the staff of The Times, where he became the tax counsel for the paper and, also, began to write articles on taxation questions for the Sunday edition.

Nelson wrote these weekly pieces for a great many years, and they are singularly interesting and apt. He was always concerned with preventing the Government, in its constant and voracious search for revenue, from taking from corporations earnings that were essential for their needs. The technique of the tax gatherer is to compel the reckless payment of taxable dividends under threat of confiscatory taxing if the money is retained for corporate purposes. Nelson probably did as much to educate Congress and taxpayers to the dangers of this course as anyone in the country.

He worked hard and continuously. To follow the legislation, the tax regulations, and the rulings that pour out of Washington is a wholly engrossing task, and it left him little time to come over to the Century and swap yarns with less consecrated members. He was happy in his employment, however, and delighted to study out the merits and the pitfalls of the latest lucubrations of the Treasury Department.

Nelson was a man of immense integrity and great modesty. He was meticulously prompt in answering the very considerable number of letters he received about his articles in The Times, and, of course, such correspondence is one of the rewards of journalism: the visible effect of inward effort.

Charles Reinold Noyes

C. Reinold Noyes graduated from Yale in 1905 and went into the wholesale drug business in St. Paul. He worked at this most successfully, becoming a director of a couple of banks and a trustee or officer of various civic, educational, and philanthropic organizations. After twenty-five years of this he got fed up, and in his late forties, driven by sheer intellectual curiosity, he took up the life of a scholar. For three years he was a special student in the Graduate School at Johns Hopkins, studying economics and psychology.

Then he began to write books and articles dealing with the problems of economics. Perhaps the best known are America's Destiny and Economic Man; but the range of his productive work was wonderfully wide and included studies of the institution of property, and the physiological and psychological nature of man, and the springs of human action.

In the Century, he organized an Economic Group with members who were interested in these matters, and he was the counselor, director, and moving spirit of it. So long as he could move about, Reinold presided over the dinner-meetings of this group and over the animated discussions that followed. As moderator he was altogether admirable: gracious, skillful, and just. With his clean-cut features, his clipped gray mustache, and a kind of military precision in his manner, he might have been the Colonel of a Regiment of the Guards presiding over a particularly articulate and talkative Officers' Mess.

The last six or eight years he was crippled with arthritis and exceedingly handicapped in getting about. But he loved the Century, and long after he was forced to use crutches he came to the monthly meetings and continued to administer the Economic Group. He was a vibrant, affirmative man: competent, informed and urgent, engined with a never-failing intellectual ferment.

William Francklyn Paris

Francklyn Paris was born in New York in 1871. He was a member of the Century for forty years. From his childhood he was interested in art, and he became—in his own phrase—an architect-decorator. His productions are to be found in the state capitols of Missouri, Minnesota, and West Virginia, in Chicago, in the Detroit library, in the Supreme Court Building at Washington, D.C., and in New Jersey; but his influence extended all over western Europe and America. He was entirely familiar with London, Rome, and Paris and had studied in those cities and admired them and their people.

He belonged to numerous art societies—some important and some obscure—and took the trouble to contribute ideas to them; he was not only useful but well and favorably known throughout the world of art. In 1922 he founded the American Society of the French Legion of Honor. This came to interest him beyond all his other activities, and in 1946 he became president of it. His devotion to the French was amply reciprocated, and his friendships with important families in France was a source of pleasure and satisfaction to him and to them.

Paris fought in the Spanish War and in the First World War and had a collection of curious yarns of his life as a soldier. He had an attractive way of being detached and objective about himself and his adventures that provoked attention. He was always carefully dressed, temperate in his meats and drinks, and a man of great nobility of spirit. He was loyal to his way of life and untroubled by serious doubts or internal tensions. He lived a long time and traveled much in the realms of gold, and what he saw he understood.

Stephen Beasley Linnard Penrose

Stephen Penrose graduated from Whitman College, Walla Walla, Washington, in 1928. His father, a great pioneer, was President of the college; and after Stephen had taken a Ph.D. at Columbia he went back to Whitman and taught there for a time. In 1938 he became Assistant Director of the Near East College Association with headquarters in New York. Then the war came on us, and he was given related responsibilities in Washington and Cairo. In 1948 he became the fourth President of the American University of Beirut, in Lebanon; there he worked the rest of his life teaching agriculture, economics, engineering, and public administration to the Arabs, and combating the constant drumfire of Soviet propaganda. Some three thousand students are enrolled in the college, representing fifty-one nationalities and forty religious sects, and its graduates are among the most influential groups in the Near East.

This man died at the age of forty-six, only a short month after his election to the Century. That we should have been bereft of his companionship in this untimely way is a cause for sorrow; that our country should have thus been deprived of his invaluable services is a calamity of the first magnitude. He was an outpost of Western civilization in a land filled with strife. In him men reposed confidence, and in his house the youth received instruction. His contributions to freedom, order, and education in the Levant were already great. In a little while they would have been immense. For the unhappy Arabs he was a hiding place from the wind and a covert from the tempest; he was as rivers of water in a dry place, as the shadow of a great rock in a weary land.

It is hard for us to accept the fate that took him away so young, for there was not time for him to come to know the Club, and so very few of us yet knew what glorious good company he was: serious and gay, rollicking and sober.

Charles Alison Scully

Alison Scully graduated from the University of Pennsylvania in 1909 and from its Law School in 1912. He started to practice law in Philadelphia but he was more interested in banking, and after a few years he became trust officer in the Corn Exchange Bank in Philadelphia. From there he came to New York as vice president of the Bank of Commerce, and in 1929 he became vice president of the Bank of the Manhattan Company and continued there till 1942, when he returned to Philadelphia to be executive vice president of Corn Exchange.

All this shuttling back and forth between the cities brought Scully into contact with not only the banking fraternities but also all sorts of civilized and diverting people to whose company he contributed a slightly exotic atmosphere: in New York he was a distinguished Philadelphian, and to the City of Brotherly Love he was a popular cosmopolite. His life was pleasant; he was exceedingly competent at his employment; he was interested in music and art, and he was a director of the Philadelphia Orchestra and a manager of the Pennsylvania Academy of Fine Arts.

Alison had a smiling acquaintance with an astonishing number of men. He was a thoroughly domesticated person, polite, amusing, and he fitted without difficulty into any group he joined. He was always welcome, and his easy manners and tolerant attitude had a kind of catalytic effect of bringing people out and encouraging conversation and friendly intercourse.

Samuel Shellabarger

Samuel Shellabarger graduated from Princeton in 1909. He took all the undergraduate literary prizes that there were. In 1917 he received a Ph.D. degree from Harvard. He was a fluent linguist, speaking French, German, Italian, Spanish, Swedish, Latin, Greek—and English.

He started out to be a teacher of English, and he taught, on and off, at Princeton; but he was immensely interested in the history and literature of Western Europe, and he took to writing historical novels, so that eventually he quit teaching. In 1945 he published Captain from Castile, and this brought him universal recognition as the top author of the historical-novel field. His books were not only popular, both in America and in Europe, but also exceedingly remunerative; and the more money he made, the more he traveled, the more he delved in ancient archives, and the more and better stories he wrote. He took infinite pains to have his novels historically correct, and it is related that he spent days poring over old records and wrote more than forty letters to appropriate experts trying to find out whether Cortez transported his horses to America below decks or above.

Sam had a very clear and penetrating mind. It was a delight to talk with him about things worth while, for he would always, and naturally, go beyond the conventional observations and remarks and get down to what really mattered. He was a good teacher because he had a genuine understanding of and sympathy with other people, and this is likewise the reason he was a first-class novelist.

First and always he was an American. He had a pleasant, homely face and a large, disarming smile. He was earthy and informal, easy to like, easy to admire; and just to be with him gave a warm sense of pleasure. His family had been here since the seventeenth century; he was a descendant of Governor William Bradford. No ancestor had ever tampered with his name. His father was a United States Senator and a personal friend of President Lincoln. He was brought up in a great tradition and he did honor to it.

Kenneth Charles Morton Sills

Kenneth Sills graduated from Bowdoin College in 1901 with an academic record of "straight A's" in all courses—a feat never equaled in the whole history of Bowdoin. After two years of graduate work at Harvard he returned to Bowdoin as an instructor in English and the classics; and in 1918 he was inaugurated President of the College, an office that he held until he retired in 1952.

Dr. Sills was called to succeed a distinguished President of Bowdoin in a day of questioning, when Christianity was challenged and civilization threatened and when all the intellectual and spiritual freedom for which the College stood was in danger from the intensity of the war effort. He held the tradition of scholarship, not as dead, immutable, and obstructive, but as a quickening spirit that changes its form and expression to meet changing conditions in a dynamic world. He kept to his purpose and his ideals with the utmost integrity; he guided the fortunes of Bowdoin through two World Wars, through the social and economic dislocations of a great depression, and through the virulent lunacies begotten of the fear of communism. He resisted the march of the barbarian nomads and their mechanized caravans; he insisted on the importance of the individual; he proposed to have a college brave enough to serve the common good, without allowing itself to become common in that service. Wisdom he prized above efficiency, and personal values more than social mechanisms or mass action.

To this man all of us who are anything more than technicians owe a debt; for he was one of those who stood fast when the times were dark and fought against those who tried to regiment us all. What he did for Bowdoin is beyond calculation. He gave a course himself, in comparative literature affectionately known as "Casey's Lit." It was a grown-up course that every senior took; and there one learned of the Bible, Greek and Roman literature, Dante, Milton, and all the heroes that have been and all the bards that have sung in the great world. K.C., as he was called, faced the unfolding future with faith and without fear—for he was sure:

> Yet all experience is an arch where-thro'
> Gleams that untraveled world, whose margin fades
> For ever and for ever. . . .

Willard Learoyd Sperry

Willard L. Sperry was Dean of the Harvard Divinity School. His father was President of Olivet College in Michigan, and he studied there; but in 1904 he went to Oxford as a Rhodes Scholar, taking his degree with honors in theology in 1907. He became a Congregational minister, but he was increasingly interested in theological scholarship, and in 1922 he resigned his parish in Boston and became Dean and, later, Plummer Professor of Christian Morals and Chairman of the Harvard Board of Preachers.

He was a born teacher, and he brought out the best in people. He gave to his School heightened morale, increased dimensions, and standards which were the envy of more liberally endowed institutions. With infinitely more learning than he would ever claim, he had a full and deep appreciation of the value and relevance of scholarship in the rigorous sense, and he harbored no fears of what it might prove. He trusted reason and revelation alike, and, while fully aware of the inevitability of change, he had a deep faith in the continuity of experience, or, if you will, "the communion of the saints."

Sperry was pure in heart without being puritanical, a Christian without bigotry, a churchman without denominationalism. Yale, Amherst, Brown, and Williams conferred the D.D. degree on him, and Harvard the S.T.D. in 1941. He was one of those rare clergymen who are esteemed equally by men of their own profession and by laymen—even laymen who might normally be a trifle anticlerical. His transparent honesty, his friendliness, his good humor, his fund of stories, and his genuine and unselfish interest in others made him an ideal companion. He dearly loved the Century and never missed an opportunity of being there.

Robert Bruce Taylor

Robert Bruce Taylor was born at Cardoss, Scotland, in 1869. He was educated at Sherborne School and Glasgow University, where he took the A.M. in 1890 and, later, the D.D. He then studied law, and became an Examiner in Economics in Glasgow and Aberdeen Universities. He had a keen mind and might have gone far as an economist, but he became interested in religion and turned away to study theology.

He specialized in Semitic languages and taught Hebrew for some years; but the urge to join the ministry was very strong in him, and he became a Presbyterian clergyman serving successively in Loudoun, Aberdeen, London, and Montreal. In the First World War he was commissioned chaplain and major in the British Expeditionary Force, and served with the Forty-second Royal Highlanders of Canada in Belgium and France. After the war he became Principal of Queens University, Kingston, Ontario, and he held this position many years.

Dr. Taylor was thoroughly a Scot. He had the patience of the Bruce, the energy of John Knox, and the logical mental processes of Hume. He studied at Marburg and at Göttingen when these universities were setting the intellectual pace for Europe, and he came to have a profound understanding of the function of education and its relation to God and man.

He was thirty-five years a member of the Century, but in the last two decades he made his home in France and, so, he was not often in the Club.

Augustus Baldwin Wadsworth

Augustus Baldwin Wadsworth graduated from Massachusetts Institute of Technology in 1892. From there he went at once into the College of Physicians and Surgeons at Columbia and took his medical degree four years later. After he had finished his internship he decided to go into medical research, and in this field he spent the rest of his life.

He was an extremely lively and imaginative worker, and he not only was fertile himself in the study of bacteriology and immunology, but he was a competent and stimulating administrator of the laboratories which he came to have charge of. He was Director of the New York State Laboratories for the Study of Preventive Medicine and Public Health, President of the New York Pathological Society, Secretary of the Harvey Society, and honorably connected with numerous other medical associations of the City. He was a recognized expert on serum and vaccine therapy and coagulation of the blood.

With all this, Wadsworth was for some years officially listed among the ten topflight tennis players of the country. He was likewise a most remarkably good billiard player and could hold his own with the best players in the Club in the days when men could really play billiards. His eye was true and his hand was steady.

He was an autocrat in the things he chose to do, and he was sufficiently and liberally endowed so that he had freedom of choice. In his work—as in his play—he was a perfectionist, pursuing a clue through a thousand tests till he had run it to earth. When unexpected effects occurred, he could not rest till he understood the cause. He was catholic in his tastes and a wide reader in the literature outside his profession. He was kindly in his friendships and tolerant, but not of mediocrity.

To unroll a little more of the scroll of the mysteries of physiology is to serve one's fellows well and to be content.

Charles Warren

Charles Warren was born in Boston and graduated from Harvard in 1889, magna cum laude. In 1892 he took the A.M. in law, and commenced to practice with the firm of Storey and Thorndyke; and later he was associated with Governor Russell. He was an active Democrat living in Boston in the period after the extinction of the Copperheads and before the advent of the Irish.

He served as Chairman of the Massachusetts Civil Service Commission for six years, till 1911, and completely revised the entire system of civil appointments. Indeed, he so effectually destroyed the abuse of political patronage that he failed to be reappointed by the Governor.

Warren was an industrious and scholarly lawyer. He became an authority on the Constitution and the Supreme Court, and in 1923 he received the Pulitzer Prize for his three-volume study, The Supreme Court in United States History. In 1924, 1929, and 1936 the Supreme Court appointed him special master to sit in three cases of original jurisdiction involving disputes between the States. In 1937 he was American representative on an international tribunal established to arbitrate a dispute between the United States and Canada. These important commissions were recognitions of the respect in which he was held by Bench and Bar and were a deserved tribute to his very considerable abilities.

His contributions to jurisprudence were specific rather than philosophical like Bentham's. He would take some particular problem, such as the administration of the common law of the States by the Federal Courts, and collect all the data in existence having to do with the matter. Then he would arrange this accumulation, classify it, eliminate the irrelevant particles, get it into some compassable shape whereby it could be examined, and then come to conclusions about it. This kind of operation requires a high order of intellectual capacity, and Warren combined this with an awareness of the practical limitations of theory that made his work extremely valuable.

In 1933 Columbia conferred on him the LL.D. degree. The citation read: "Truly learned in the law and associated with many forms of legal public service, outstanding and scholarly historian of the history and development of the judicial department of our Government."

George Frisbie Whicher

George F. Whicher graduated from Amherst in 1910 and took a Ph.D. degree from Columbia in 1915. In that year he returned to Amherst as an Associate Professor of English, and he continued as a member of the faculty there the rest of his life. He was a gifted and inspiring teacher of literature and a wise interpreter of the life matrices that produce it. He was also a friendly and cultivated person, and among the undergraduates he was a never-failing wellspring of civilizing influence.

Whicher was scholarly but not aggressive, and his lectures and writings had a quality of effortlessness that gave them grace and spontaniety. He was much respected by his colleagues, and at the time of the Meiklejohn troubles he pursued the even tenor of his way without becoming embroiled in the bitter differences that split the faculty. He was an authority on Thoreau, and perhaps he had absorbed some of Thoreau's capacity to be entirely himself no matter what the current bedevilment of the general.

At Amherst, morning chapel is still compulsory, and Whicher there gave some remarkable talks intimately revealing of his own character and understanding. They were polished gems of wit, learning, and wisdom, and were eventually published in a little book, Mornings at 8:50. The dedication reads:

To Charles Woolsey Cole, President of Amherst College, who, by exerting an authority more compulsive than any dentist's, drew these thirty-two Chapel talks, one by one, from a reluctant mouth.

The son of a Centurion, Whicher valued the Club and his membership in it, and came to the club house as often as his ranging academic life would permit. His youthful good looks, the reach and depth of his mind, and the felicitous precision of what he said and how he said it were complemented by a warm heart and unaffected simplicity.

Joseph Winterbotham

Joseph Winterbotham prepared at Andover and graduated from Yale Sheffield Scientific School in 1900. Then he went back to Chicago where he worked at the family manufacturing business. He was an industrial engineer and exceedingly competent.

Some twenty-five years ago he retired from active business and went to live in Burlington, Vermont; and there he became involved, first with Vermont, and second with modern French art. He used to go abroad every year on a buying expedition, and his house at Burlington was filled with paintings by Van Gogh, Renoir, Cézanne, Daumier, Matisse, and other well-known artists. He had no end of fun doing this, and he used to lend his pictures to museums and exhibitions or give them to the University of Vermont.

In Burlington, Winterbotham was a devoted and useful citizen. He was actively connected with the Vermont Industrial Agricultural Products Commission and was instrumental in introducing several new crops in the agricultural plan of the state. He was Chairman of the Burlington Housing Authority, and Administrator of the Vermont State Art Project. He left his house and grounds to the University.

Joe was a very pleasant companion. He was not pressed to make money, and he occupied himself with matters that interested him and that he was good at. He always had time to listen and talk, he was cheerful and amusing; the world was kind to him, and he was a constant factor that contributed to order and the Good Life.

Clarence Clark Zantzinger

Clarence C. Zantzinger prepared at St. Paul's and graduated from Yale Sheffield Scientific School in 1892 with a Ph.B. degree in engineering. After studying architecture and taking a B.S. degree at the University of Pennsylvania, he went to Paris, and in 1901 he received a diploma from the l'École des Beaux-Arts.

He was born in Philadelphia, and he returned there to practice architecture. He was not only a distinguished and busy member of the profession, but he early became involved with numerous collateral activities. He had a great admiration for France and the French, and he, together with Charles Butler and William Emerson (Centurions all), were largely responsible for the bringing of young Frenchmen each year to America to study and observe the methods and concepts of architects here. He was wont to collect his fellow members of the Committee on Education of the American Institute of Architects at his house in Chestnut Hill, and they exchanged ideas there in the warm and friendly atmosphere of his kindly hospitality. He was also an officer of the Legion of Honor and served as President of the Pennsylvania State Fine Arts Commission.

Perhaps Zantzinger's best known work is the Philadelphia Art Museum, though Philadelphia is filled with monuments to his talent. He lived there all his life and was very much a part of it, and he labored unceasingly to add to its lustre. He was the affectionately revered patron of the School of Architecture of the University of Pennsylvania and could always be counted on to help out whether the business afoot was a pageant, a competition, a lecture, or the welcoming of a distinguished visitor.

He was eighty-two years old when he died. He had come to be a kind of institution, an elder statesman whose opinion was respected and whose approval was sought by those who came after him. Surely this is a happy consummation.

Harry St. Clair Zogbaum

Harry Zogbaum—he was known as Toody—was born in New York and studied at the Columbia School of Architecture. Then he joined the office of McKim, Mead and White and practised architecture there for some years before opening his own office. His father was a noted marine architect and illustrator and long a member of the Century.

Zogbaum was one of a small group who struggled for release from Gothic, Romanesque, and other alien influences which dominated American architecture in the later days of Victoria and Edward VII. He was sure that American buildings should be built of local materials and in the colonial tradition, and he carried out these ideas very successfully, particularly at Cooperstown, where he designed the museums and the big stone building now used as headquarters for the New York State Historical Association.

He was a very pleasant, gentle person. He and his wife lived a somewhat Bohemian life and knew a lot of people in the literary and artistic world. They were excellent company, and when she died, some twelve years ago, Toody was indeed bereaved and fell into difficulties with John Barleycorn.

He lived at Cooperstown for the last decade, and he was happy there, and content, and in the midst of old friends who were fond of him.
